Harwich, s-p. Eng., in Essex, at the mouths of the Stour and Orwell, where they unite and form a large bay soon after falling into the German ocean ; 72 NE. London. Lon. 1. 7. E. Lat. 51. 56. N. Pop. 3,732. It is celebrated for its post office packets, which carry on a great intercourse with Holland and the continent, sailing and returning twice a week, and thus drawing a double influx of strangers into the town, from home, and from abroad. Upwards of 3,000 tons of shipping are employed in the North sea fishery. The harbour, independent of the bay, is safe and convenient. Here is a very good dock-yard for building ships ; and great conveniences are erected here for sea-bathing, both hot and cold. It sends 2 members to parliament. Here are 2 markets weekly, on Tuesday and Friday ; and in time of peace packets sail regularly, if wind and weather do not prevent, every Wednesday and Saturday, with the mail to Helvoetsluys, a passage of about 90 miles.

Havannah, or Havana, city, s-p. Cuba, on N. coast, on the W. side of the harbour, with the sea in its front. Lon. 82. 14. W. Lat. 23. 9. N. Pop. estimated at 60, or 70,000. The harbour is not only the best in the island, but by many esteemed the best in the world, not only on account of its strength, but because it is capable of containing commodiously 1,000 ships, without either cable or anchor, there being generally 6 fathoms water in the bay. The entrance into the harbour is by a narrow channel, so difficult of access, that only one vessel can enter at a time, and fortified strongly with platforms, works, and artillery, for half a mile, which is the length of the passage.

Havannah is the most important commercial port in Spanish America, and is considered as the key of the West Indies. The exports consist of sugar, wax, coffee, tobacco, and other productions of Cuba. The total annual amount of the trade is computed at 20,000,000 piastres. In 1821, the number of vessels entered was 1,322; cleared, 1,254. Here are large dock yards for building ships of war.—The city contains 11 fine churches, magnificently ornamented with gold, silver, images, &c., several convents, 2 hospitals, a lazaretto, and numerous other public buildings. The great square is a fine ornament to the town. The elegant houses are mostly of stone.

Hebrides, or Western Islands, a name given to a cluster of islands, situated in the N. Atlantic ocean, to the W. of Scotland. The principal are Lewis, North and South Uist, Skye, Benbecula, Mull, and Jura. They extend about 180 miles in length, from N. to S., and from 10 to 30 in breadth; and the whole are divided into 8 parishes. These islands were anciently called Ebudæ and Hebridæ, afterwards Hebrides. Many of them are fertile, and might, with skilful culture, be converted into fruitful fields, and some of them have valuable minerals. The various tracts of ground and clusters of rocks are supposed to amount to 300, of which 86 are inhabited. The inhabitants, who are supposed to amount to about 70,000, are a hardy and robust people, destitute of a great part of the conveniences of civilized life. See Lewis, Skye, Mull, Jura, St. Kilda, &c.

Herculaneum, p-t. & cap. Jefferson co. Mis-souri, on W. bank of the Mississippi, 30 miles above St. Genevieve, 29 S. St. Louis, 35 NE. Potosi, W. 909. It contains a court house, a jail, and about 40 houses. Here is a warehouse for storing lead and merchandise; and near the town are 3 shot towers, where shot is manufac-tured by letting it fall down the banks of the Mississippi, which are high and formed of lime-stone. The exports, for a period of 18 months, ending June, 1818, consisting of lead, shot, boards, flour, whiskey, gunpowder, &c., amount-ed to $353,681,87. About one half of the lead obtained from the lead mines of Missouri, has, for several years past, been exported from this place. The annual quantity exported in the years 1817 and 1818, amounted to about 2,000,000 lbs.

Herculaneum, ancient city, Naples, near where Portici now stands; 5 E. by S. Naples. It was totally overwhelmed by an eruption of mount Vesuvius, A. D. 79, in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Titus, being buried under volcanic substances to a depth of 70 feet. In the years 1689 and 1711, upon digging in these parts, something of this city was discov-ered. In the year 1738, fresh attempts began to be made, and since that time a prodigious number of ancient monuments of every kind have been discovered, such as basilica, 2 tem-ples, a theatre, paintings, statues, bustos, furni-ture, and utensils; whole streets have been cleared, and are found to be paved and flagged on both sides. The relics are found in a sur-prising state of preservation, and afford a good idea of the manners of the age, and improve-ment in the arts. The statues, vases, tripods, and lamps are often of the finest workmanship, being much superior to the pictures. The re-lics, which have lately excited the greatest in-terest, are the manuscripts; chiefly in Greek, but part also in Latin. The number of manu-scripts and fragments originally brought to the museum of Portici, was 1,696; of which, ac-cording to a report published by sir Humphrey Davy in 1819, 88 had been unrolled, and found legible; 319 found illegible; 1,265 not then operated upon.—See Pompeii.

Cassel is the capital, but Hanau is the principal trading town.—The sovereign is styled elector of Hesse and grand duke of Fulda. The government is a limited monarchy. The inhabitants are composed of about 320,000 Reformed, 142,000 Lutherans, 73,000 Catholics, 9,000 Jews, and 230 Mennonists.—There is a university at Marburg, lyceums at Cassel and Fulda, and other seminaries elsewhere; but the Hessians are inferior to the Saxons in education.

The surface is hilly and in some parts mountainous; the soil not generally very fertile except in the province of Hanau, where it is rich, and the climate kindly. The productions are grain, potatoes, some hemp, flax, tobacco, and vines. The pasturage is generally good, and wood abundant.—The minerals are copper, silver, cobalt, iron, salt, vitriol, alum, pit coal, marble, and basalt.—The principal rivers are the Werra, Fulda, Diemel, Maine, Eder, Kinzig, Schwalm, and Lahn.

Hesse, or Hesse Darmstadt, grand duchy, Ger., divided into two distinct parts, which are separated from each other by a long stripe of land, extending along the north side of the Maine. The northern division, called Upper Hesse is nearly surrounded by Hesse Cassel and Nassau; the southern lies on the south side of the Maine, and on both sides of the Rhine. Pop. according to the official statement of 1818, 619,500.

Darmstadt is the capital; Mentz the largest town; other towns, Giessen, Worms, and Bingen. The inhabitants are mostly Lutherans, with a considerable number of Catholics and Calvinists, and some Anabaptists.—The government is a limited monarchy.—There is a university at Giessen, and classical schools at Mentz, Giessen, Worms, and Darmstadt.

The surface is generally hilly or mountainous; the soil in many parts poor, but in the valleys fertile; and pasturage generally good. The principal productions are grain, potatoes, flax, tobacco, fruits, and vegetables; and vines along the banks of the Rhine and Maine.—It produces considerable iron, copper, lead, and salt.—The climate is generally healthy, and the situation on the Rhine and Maine favourable to trade.

Hesse-Homburg, principality, Ger., at the foot of the Taurus mountains, 7 or 8 miles N. Frankfort on the Maine, with the title of Landgrave, belonging to a younger branch of the family of Hesse Darmstadt. Sq. m. 26. Pop. 6,826. The congress of Vienna, in 1815, gave to the prince the district of Meissenheim, on the west of the Rhine, containing 10,136 inhabitants, and 8 sq. m. He has also some other small districts. The total population of his territories was stated, in 1818, at 20,000. His residence is at Homburg. The religion of the family is the Calvinist.

Highlands, a natural division of Scotland, comprising the mountainous part of the country to the north and northwest, in contradistinction to the Lowlands, which comprehend the south and southeast counties. The division is formed by the Grampian mountains, which extend across the island from Argyleshire, on the Atlantic, to Aberdeenshire, on the German ocean. The 16 northern and northwestern counties lie chiefly in the Highlands; and the Hebrides are also included. The whole of this great district is wild, rugged, and mountainous; many of the mountains rise to a great height, with valleys of corresponding depth, intervening, from which, for some months in the year, the direct rays of the sun are in a great degree excluded. The vales are generally occupied by lakes or precipitous rivers. The proportion of arable land is small; it is found chiefly in the valleys and on the lakes and rivers, where there are tracts of fertile soil. In these mountains are the sources of numerous streams, which generally descend to the ocean in rapid currents.

The Highlanders are a branch of the ancient Cellæ. They were always a brave, warlike, and hardy race: divided into tribes called clans; those of inferior order being vassals of particular chieftains. They have always been fond of poetry and music, and every family of note retained a historian or bard to celebrate the heroic deeds of the chieftain and his clan. Their religion was deeply tinged with superstition; they believed in ghosts and apparitions, and practised charms and incantations. Their language is still Gaelic. Their cottages are miserable habitations, built with round stones, cemented with alternate layers of turf thatched with sods, and often with heath. Their food is chiefly oatmeal, milk, &c., with a quantity of meat for a mart at Christmas. Before the beginning of the last century, there were no regular roads to connect the Highlands with the low country. But since that time roads have been opened; they enter the mountains at 3 different parts of the low country; at Crieff, Dunkeld, and by Luss, on Loch Lomond. The feudal institutions have been undermined, and a great change has taken place in the state of property and manners. Industry and improvement have made rapid progress, and the inhabitants are now beginning to avail themselves of the resources of their country, in their mines, woods, pastures, and fisheries.

Highlands, mountainous tract, N. Y., on the banks of the Hudson, below Newburgh, between 40 and 60 miles above New York. The passage on the river through these Highlands, for the distance of about 18 miles, is romantic and grand in a high degree. The opening seems to have been formed on purpose for the passage of the noble river. Some of the principal peaks are Thunder Hill, St. Anthony's Nose, Sugar Loaf, Butter Hill, Bull Hill, Break Neck Hill, New & Old Beacon. The military post of West Point is in these Highlands.

Himaleh, Himmaleh, Himalaya, or Himāla Mountains, (an. Emodus, Imaus, or Himaus,) stupendous range of mountains, Asia, which separate Hindoostan from Thibet and Tartary. The name is sometimes applied to the whole range, which extends from near the Caspian sea, on the west, to the confines of China, on the east. The part west of the Indus, is called Hindoo Kho. The Himaleh range commences in Kashgar, about Lon. 74. E. and reaches to the confines of China, Lon. 94. E. It extends in a direction generally about northwest and southeast, about 1,400 miles in length, and from about 50 to 100 miles in breadth. The greatest latitude is about 25. N. The Burrampooter, Ganges, & Indus, with their subsidiary streams, rise from these mountains, and flow south, and the Oxus, Sihon, and other rivers, rise on the opposite side. They are covered with snow throughout the year, and both their ancient and modern names bear an allusion to snow or cold.

The ancients had knowledge of these mountains as an elevated range, yet no attempt to ascertain their height is known to have been made till within a few years. If the calculations recently made may be confided in, they are doubtless the most elevated mountains on the globe. These calculations differ considerably, yet they all agree in making the elevation great. According to Col. Crawford and Mr. Colebrooke, the height of Dholagir or, Dhawala-giri, i. e. White mountain, from the mean of several observations, is 27,550 feet above the sea. According to the observations of Col. Crawford, one of the peaks, visible at Patna, is more than 20,000 feet above the plain of Nepaul, or about 25,000 feet above the level of the sea. From some other observations, the height of Dhawala-giri is stated on the lowest computation at 26,862 feet. Capt. Webb, a few years since, measured the height of 27 summits, the highest of which was 25,669, the lowest 15,733, and 21 of them upwards of 20,000 feet high. Dhawala-giri, according to the observations of Capt. Blake, still more recent, as calculated by Mr. Colebrooke, is 28,015 feet high, and Swelgar, or Nepal mountain, 25,261 feet. The peak of Chamalasi, near the frontiers of Thibet, is visible from various stations in Bengal, the most remote of which is not less than 232 miles distant. The above measurements were made trigonometrically, and must be considered as of doubtful accuracy. Though these mountains are unquestionably among the highest on the globe, yet it is still doubted by some whether they are more elevated than the Andes.

HINDOSTAN, or Hindoostan, or Indostan, or India on this side of the Ganges, called by the aborigines Bharata, extensive region, Asia, lying between Lon. 65. and 92. E. Lat. 8. and 35. N. Hindostan, in the most extensive sense, comprises 4 great divisions.

1. Northern Hindostan. This comprises Cabul and Cashmere on the west, and Bootan on the east, with the intermediate provinces. Nepal, with its tributary districts, comprises a great part of this division.

2. Hindustan Proper. This is composed of the 11 soubahs or provinces of Lahore, Moul-tan including Sindy, Agimere, Delhi, Agra, Allahabad, Bahar, Oude, Bengal, Malwa, and Guzerat.

3. The Deccan. This division includes the provinces of Aurungabad, Candeish, Golconda, Berar, the Northern circars, Orissa, and a great part of Bejapour.

4. The south of India. This division extends from the river Kistnah to the ocean, and comprises the Carnatic, Mysore, Canara, Malabar, &c.

Extent and Population. The following is a statement of the estimated extent and population of the parts of Hindostan possessed by Great Britain, of the British allies and tributaries, and the independent states, according to Mr. W. Hamilton.

Total of Hindostan 1,020,000 101,000,000

Cities. There are many large cities; some of the principal are Calcutta, Benares, Surat, Madras, Bombay, Lucknow, Patna, Dacca, Lahore, Delhi, Agra, Hyderabad, Poonah, Ougein, and Jyenagur. The cities of Hindostan are, in general, built on one plan, with very narrow, confined, and crooked streets, a great number of tanks and reservoirs for water, with numerous gardens interspersed. The houses are variously built, some of brick, others of mud, and still more of bamboos and mats.

Face of the country. Northern Hindostan is mountainous. Hindostan Proper is, for the most part, a champaign country, with occasional hills of no great elevation. In the Deccan and south of India, the country is flat on the sea coasts on both sides, and mountainous in the interior.

Mountains. The Himaleh mountains, which lie on the north side of Northern Hindostan, are reputed the highest in the world. The Eastern and Western Gauts are the most remarkable mountains in India. The Western Gauts, the highest and longest range, extend from Cape Comorin to Surat, generally about 40 miles from the sea coast.

Rivers. The Ganges, Burrampooter, and Indus are among the largest rivers in Asia. The other considerable rivers are the Kistnah, Jumnah, Nerbuddah, Godavery, Chunaub, Puddar, Setledge, Taptee, and Chumbull.

Climate. The climate of the northern parts is temperate, but in all the southern parts heat predominates; and during a part of the year it is very great. The monsoons prevail south of the tropics. The seasons in Hindostan Proper are divided into cold, hot, and dry.

Soil. A large proportion of the soil is exceedingly fertile. There are two harvests in a year, the former in September and October; the latter in March and April.

Productions. The article of produce more extensively cultivated than any other, is rice; cotton in abundance, wheat in some parts; also sugar, indigo, tobacco, opium, millet, and various kinds of fruit.

Manufactures. The staple manufacture is that of cotton. The other principal manufactures are those of silk, wool, leather, and salt-petre.

Commerce. The commerce is very great, and is carried on chiefly by Great Britain, and also, to a considerable extent, by the United States.

Exports. The exports consist of cotton, piece goods, rice, indigo, saltpetre, opium, silk, sugar, precious stones, &c.

Minerals. The metals are not abundant. The diamond mines have been long celebrated, but have now ceased to be very valuable. They are found in Golconda, near Pannah, Sumbulpour, &c.

Inhabitants. The Hindoos constitute the great mass of the population; the Mahometans are supposed to form one eighth of the inhabitants; besides these there are Parsees, Jews, and Christians.

Hindoos. The most striking feature in the character of the Hindoos is the permanency of their religion and customs. In these there has been scarce any alteration since the state of India was first known. Their food consists of rice, milk, vegetables, and ghee.

Castes. The Hindoos are divided into four castes. 1. The brahmins; 2. soldiers; 3. those devoted to agriculture and commerce; 4. labourers. These castes are all kept entirely distinct, and are not permitted to intermarry.

Parsees. The Parsees are descendants of the followers of Zoroaster, and are numerous in Guzerat and Bombay. They are a hardy and enterprising people.

Religion. The religion of the Hindoos is a cruel and degrading superstition, which is artfully interwoven with almost every action of daily life. There are 28 rivers which are regarded as holy, and a great number of holy places, which are much visited by pilgrims.—The most sacred books among the Hindoos are the Vedas and two great poems. The most excruciating self-torture is practised. It is a common custom for widows to burn themselves to death on the funeral pile of their husbands.

Language. The most ancient language is the Sanscrit, which is esteemed sacred.

Christianity. Christianity was very early established on the Malabar coast. Before the arrival of Vasco de Gama there were 200,000 Nestorian Christians. Within a few years numerous missionary stations have been formed in India; the most important is that of the Baptist missionaries at Serampore.

N.; 90 miles long, and from 25 to 40 broad. Sq. m. 2,088. Pop. in 1732, 900,000; in 1796, 825,500; in 1817, 747,603. It is now divided into 2 governments, North and South Holland.

North Holland is divided into 6 districts, the Hague, Leyden, Rotterdam, Dort, Gorcum, and Briel. Sq. m. 1,166. Pop. 388,508. South Holland is divided into 4 districts, Amsterdam, Haerlem, Hoorn, and Alkmaer. Sq. m. 928. Pop. 359,098. The prevailing religion is Calvinism.

Holland is remarkable for the density of its towns and villages, and for the triumph of persevering industry over the difficulties of nature. It is a continued flat, and lies so low as to be under the level of the sea at high water; the tide is prevented from flowing in by means of dikes and natural sand banks. These dikes are of great extent, generally 30 feet above the level of the adjoining land, and 20 or 30 feet in breadth at top; and the imposts necessary to keep them in repair are very heavy. The country is in all directions traversed by numerous canals and ditches, which are likewise provided with dikes, and serve not only to promote internal communication, but to drain the country. Notwithstanding, the sea, sometimes in very stormy weather, breaks through its bounds and spreads terror and devastation throughout whole tracts.

The two great rivers are the Rhine and Maese, the others, viz. the Vecht, Amstel, Zaam, Schie, Rotte, and Spaaren, have so little current as to be more properly canals or water courses. The principal lake is that of Haerlem. There is no hill, or eminence, except the downs by the sea side. The atmosphere is often cloudy; the climate moist; in some parts, especially in N. Holland, unhealthy; the winters are severe. The soil is generally rich, consisting of a deep fat loam. In the small portion of the province which is under tillage, the crops chiefly cultivated, are wheat, madder, tobacco, hemp, and flax. The agricultural wealth consists in its luxuriant pastures, which feed great numbers of horned cattle and sheep, which, together with butter and cheese, form important articles of export.—The manufactures and commerce of Holland, heretofore very extensive, were before 1814, reduced to the lowest state of depression; nor have they yet recovered their former prosperity.—The name of Holland is often applied to the Seven United Provinces, viz. Holland, Groningen, Overijssel, Guelderland, Utrecht, Zealand, and Friesland; inhabited by the Dutch; now forming a part of the kingdom of the Netherlands.

Holland, district, Eng., in Lincolnshire, situated in SE. part, with the German sea on the E. and the counties of Cambridge, Northampton, and Norfolk on the S., divided into Upper and Lower, both of which consist of fens, bogs, and marshes, drained and intersected in various ways by ditches and canals. The principal towns are Boston, Spalding, Crowland, and Holbeach.

Holland, (New), isl. in S. Pacific ocean, the largest in the world, and on account of its great extent, by some geographers, styled a continent. Lon. 110. 30. to 153. 30. E. Lat. 11. to 49. 10. S. 2,600 miles from E. to W., between Sandy Cape and the entrance of Shark's bay; upwards of 2,000 miles from Cape York on the N. to Wilson's promontory on the S. It was first discovered about the beginning of the 17th century, then called Terra Australis Incognita, and was long supposed to form a part of a great southern continent. The coasts were first seen by the Dutch in 1605; visited by Dirk Hartag, a Dutchman, in 1616. In 1627, Pieter Nuyts discovered the coast for an extent of 1,000 m. In 1642, it was visited by Tasman; in 1688, and again in 1699 by Dampier; in 1770, by Cook; in 1791, by Vancouver; afterwards by d'Entrecasteaux, and others. In 1801, 2 ships were despatched by the British government to complete the survey of the coast; and by the various expeditions the whole coast of New Holland and Van Diemen's land, has been accurately surveyed; the position of every point ascertained, and every inlet and bay traced to its conclusion.

The coasts are extremely diversified, having in some parts ranges of small and sterile islands; in other parts the shores are steep and inaccessible; on the northern coast, and in the gulf of Carpentaria, they are very flat and sandy. The interior for the most part remains unexplored. The largest river yet discovered is the Hawkesbury. The forests are said to be inferior in majesty to those of America, and in variety and elegance to those of Asia. The quadrupeds are different from those of any other quarter of the world, and are mostly of the opossum species. The animals transported from Europe have generally thriven well; also European grains; but few of the European fruits have succeeded. The inhabitants are the most degraded race of savages. They are wholly without any form of government; the only superiority consists in personal strength or courage; and their only divisions, as a people, are into families. They are of middle stature, have a large misshapen head, thick lips, wide mouth, long black hair, and a complexion nearly black. They are exceedingly filthy in their habits, and as barbarous as can be imagined; both sexes go entirely naked. They subsist chiefly on fish. The English settlement of Botany Bay is in New South Wales, on the south east coast. See Botany Bay and New South Wales.

Hottenplox, t. Moravia, in Prerau, insulated in Silesia ; 12 NNE. Jagerndorf.

Hottentots, a people inhabiting the southern parts of Africa, bordering on the Cape of Good Hope. Their country extends eastward along the sea-coast to the territory of the Caffres, and is bounded N. by Orange river, which separates them from the Boshuanas and Damaras. There are 3 races, the inhabitants of the colony of the Cape, the Bosjesmans, or wild Hottentots, who inhabit the mountainous districts, extending along the northern frontier of the colony, and the Namaquas, who occupy the NW. coast.

The Hottentots of the colony have been by no means improved in their condition by being subjected to European sway. Their numbers have of late rapidly diminished, and there are not now supposed to be within the extensive limits of the colony more than 15,000. They are mild, quiet, harmless, honest, and faithful, but extremely indolent and poor, and excessively filthy. Their complexion is yellowish brown, and their features generally ugly. Their understanding is extremely confined; can scarcely reckon a period beyond a day, or a number beyond 5. They have been treated by the colonists with extreme cruelty.

The Bosjesmans are among the ugliest of human beings; are extremely diminutive in size, the tallest of the men measuring only 4 feet 9 inches, and of the women 4 feet 4 inches. Though resembling the Hottentots of the colony in their persons, they display a disposition and temper entirely different; and their activity is incredibly great. They raise neither corn nor cattle, but subsist upon spontaneous roots, and what they acquire by hunting and plunder. The Namaqua Hottentots differ but little in their persons from the other tribes, but use a language widely different.

The Moravians established a mission among the Hottentots, in 1736, which was renewed in 1792. Since that time the London and Methodist societies have sent out many missionaries. As many as 30 missionaries are now supported by these societies in South Africa. The labours of the missionaries, in many instances, have been attended with remarkable success. The Hottentots in several settlements have been reclaimed to habits of industry, and now cultivate fields, and exercise the arts and enjoy the comforts of civilized life.

Houssa, or Haussa, called also Asna, by the people of Bornou, and Soudan by the Arabs; an extensive country or empire of Africa, extending along the banks of the Niger, and comprehending several kingdoms or states, as Cashna, Cabj, Guber, Daura, Cano, Nyffe, and some others. The inhabitants, as represented to Mr. Horneman, are negroes, but not quite black; they are the most intelligent people in the interior of Africa. Their character is benevolent and mild. Industry and art, and the cultivation of the natural productions of the land prevail in their country; and in this respect they excel the Fezzaners, who get the greatest part of their clothes and household implements from the Soudanians. They can dye in their country any colour but scarlet. The culture of their land is as perfect as that of the Europeans; although the manner of doing it is very troublesome.—According to the information of Bowdich, Houssa, the capital, is some days' journey N. of the Gambarow, a branch of the Niger, is larger than Tombuctoo, and superior to any other city north of the Niger, except the Bornou. Hull, r. Eng., in the county of York, which runs into the Humber, at Hull.

Hull, or Kingston-upon-Hull, s-p. Eng., in E. Riding of Yorkshire; 36 SE. York, 97 E. Manchester, 174 N. London. Lon. 0. 16. W. Lat. 53. 45. N. Pop. in 1811, 26,792; and including Drypool, Sutton, Sculcoats, and those absent at sea, upwards of 40,000. H. 4,611. It is situated on the north side of the great inlet of the Humber, at the junction of the river Hull, 20 miles from the sea. It has great advantages for commerce, having a very extensive inland navigation, communicating with York, Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, Nottingham, Birmingham, and Bristol. It is open on the east, to the eastern coast, the continent and the North sea. A harbour was formed by widening and deepening the channel of the river; and vast docks were afterwards erected for the better accommodation of the shipping. These facilities have greatly increased the business of the town; a general spirit of commercial activity and enterprise has diffused itself throughout the whole; and this growing emporium is now the 4th, if not the 3d, in commercial importance. The foreign trade is principally to the Baltic and in the whale fishery; but a regular traffic is also kept up to the southern parts of Europe, to the West Indies, and to America. The whale fishery is carried on here more extensively than at any other port in England, and in 1811, employed 42 ships. The coasting trade for coals, corn, wool, manufactured goods, &c., is prodigious; and the inland trade exceeds that of any other English port. The customs amounted, in 1802, to £438,439.

Within the last 30 years, the town has been greatly enlarged and improved. It extends nearly 2 miles along the banks of the Humber. It is generally well built, almost wholly of brick; paved, flagged, and lighted. The older streets are narrow, incommodious, and disagreeable; but in the newer parts, the streets are regular and spacious, and the buildings elegant, many of them magnificent. The public buildings are numerous, but not remarkable for elegance, except the Trinity church, which is a large and elegant Gothic edifice. It has various charitable institutions. It sends 2 members to parliament. Markets, Tuesday and Saturday.—Natives, Andrew Marvel and William Mason.

HUNGARY, country, Europe, forming under the title of a kingdom a considerable part of the Austrian dominions; bounded N. by Galicia, E. by Transylvania and Walachia, S. by Turkey, Slavonia, and Croatia, and W. by Germany. Lon. 15. to 25. 10. E. Lat. 44. 13. to 49. 26. N.; 430 miles long, and 360 broad. Sq. m. 81,138; and including some military districts, 84,200. Pop. in 1815, 7,126,008; with military districts, 7,298,343. According to Blumenbach, the population of Civil Hungary, including Croatia and Slavonia, which are united with it by the Austrian government, is 8,200,000. According to Hassel, the population of all the Hungarian states, including Hungary Proper, Croatia, and Slavonia, together with Transylvania, and 4 military districts, the population is 10,641,585. Dalmatia, Bosnia, Servia, Moldavia, Bulgaria, Walachia, and Galicia were formerly included under the name of Hungary.

Divisions. Hungary was formerly divided into Upper and Lower; but is now divided by the Austrian government into 4 great circles, or districts, which are subdivided into 52 counties. The 1st district north of the Danube contains 13 counties; the 2d, south of the Danube, 11; the 3d, north and west of the Theiss, 11; the 4th, south and east of the Theiss, 17. Of these last counties 6 embrace the civil part of Croatia and Slavonia, which lie south of the Danube and Drave. There are also some minor districts distinct from the 52 counties.

Towns. The principal towns are Buda, the residence of the viceroy, and therefore accounted the capital; Pest, the largest and most commercial town, the seat of the high courts of justice, and the place of meeting for the diet; Presburg, the former capital, and place where the kings are still crowned; Debreczin, the 2d town for population and trade; Schemnitz and Cremnitz the chief mining towns; also Zege-din, Ketskemet, Theresienstadt, Erlau, Zombar, and Neusatz. There are 42 royal free cities, 30 other cities, 590 towns, and 9,214 villages.

Government. The emperor of Austria is styled king of Hungary. The constitution is a compound of monarchy and aristocracy. The king, as the great executive magistrate, has very ample prerogatives. The diet is composed of 4 classes; 1st, the Catholic prelates; 2d, the magnates or superior nobles; 3d, the representatives of the inferior nobles; and, 4th, the representatives of the royal free towns. The administration of justice is entirely in the hands of the nobles, and none but nobles can be landed proprietors. The number of nobles of all ages and both sexes, is about 326,000.

Religion. The number of Catholics (including 6, or 800,000 Greeks united with the Catholics) in Hungary, Slavonia, and Croatia, is 4,870,000; Greeks, 1,344,100; Ref. 1,050,000; Lutherans, 650,000; Jews, 129,000. The Catholics have 3 archbishops, of Gran, Erlau, and Colocza, and, including Transylvania, 34 bishops, 16 of them only titular. The Greek church has 1 archbishop, of Carlowitz, and 7 bishops.

Tribes of people. The inhabitants are composed of about 3,983,100 Slavonians, 2,675,000 Magyars, or Maggarians, 633,000 Walachians, 570,000 Germans, 129,000 Jews.

Revenue. Stated at 3 or 4 million pounds per annum.

Education. There is a university at Pest, Reformed colleges or lyceums at Debreczin, and Saros Patak; a school of mines at Schemnitz, a lyceum at Erlau, schools of philosophy at Zege-din and Stein-am-Anger, academies at Presburg, Caschau, Gros Wardein, and Raab; 5 arch-gymnasia with 26 professors, 43 gymnasia with 88 professors, 9 normal schools, 73 principal schools, besides parish schools. Education is generally in a very backward state. The language is supposed to be a dialect of the Finnish; it is extremely difficult to acquire; and cannot boast of any authors of merit.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Danube, Drave, Theysse, Grau, Waag, Poprad, Temes, Samos, Marsch, and Marosch. The largest lakes are those of Balaton, Nieusiedl, Palitsch, and Grunsee.

Face of the country. The ranges of the Carpathian mountains separate Hungary from Austria, Moravia, Galicia, and Transylvania; there are also several detached ranges. Yet the country contains immense plains; two very extensive; one in the western part 90 miles in diameter; the lower or eastern plain comprises nearly one half of the country, having a diameter of more than 200 miles. There are also some extensive marshes.

Soil and productions. The plains lying on the rivers have a rich alluvial soil. In the south a great proportion of the soil is good, yet there are large, barren heaths, and some tracts covered with moving sand; and in the north the soil is hard and untractable. The most common productions in the northern part, are barley, oats, common rye, and a species of rye called irkitza; in the southern, wheat, maize, millet, oats, and rice. Hemp, flax, tobacco, saffron, potatoes, and various fruits are cultivated. The breeding of cattle and the making of wine are important branches of industry. The country is celebrated for its pastures, and here are found some of the finest cattle in Europe. But agriculture is generally in a backward state. Of the exports, corn is the most considerable article, next tobacco, then wine, particularly Tokay, and wool; also wax, tallow, potash, alum, antimony, gal nuts, &c. Hungary produces a greater quantity of wine than all the rest of the Austrian dominions.

Minerals. These form an important part of the riches of Hungary. The whole annual produce of the mines is stated at 21,000 marks (each of 8 oz.) of gold; 91,000 marks of silver; 23,000 cwt. of lead; 48,500 cwt. of copper; 41,000 cwt. of forged iron, and 500 cwt. of zinc. There are also various kinds of precious stones. The chief mining towns are Schemnitz, Cremnitz, Herngrund, Neusohl, Schmollnitz, Nagy Banya, and Oravitza.

The Military Frontiers, a long tract of country, extending from the Adriatic to the Bukowine, 600 miles, along the confines of Illyria, Croatia, Slavonia, Hungary, and Transylvania, are divided into 4 districts; 1st, the Banat district, with 172,235 inhabitants, and 3,060 sq. m.; 2d, the Slavonian district, with 235,107 inhabitants and 2,883 sq. m.; 3d, the Croatian district, with 396,483 inhabitants and 5,808 sq. m.; 4th, the Transylvanian district, with 144,659 inhabitants and 5,363 sq. m. Total pop. 948,482. Sq. m. 17,114. H. 110,892. Every man here is literally born a soldier, and wears a military uniform, and is bound to perform military service, at home or abroad, when called upon, and more particularly to defend the frontier. The inhabitants are exempted from certain taxes, and have a portion of land assigned them, which is inalienable, and descends from father to son. Instead of civil magistrates, they are subject to captains, colonels, and generals. The whole system is under the direction of a council of war at Vienna, which acts through the medium of a military court at Peterwardein, under whose controul is likewise placed the corps of Watermen or Pontoneers, called the Tschaikisten corps, enrolled at Titul, for managing the flotillas and the passage of the rivers.

Hydra, or Idra, small island, in the Grecian Archipelago, about 16 miles long, and two broad. Lon. 23. 30. E. Lat. 39. 20. N. Pop. 25,000 Greeks. It is rocky, and little cultivated, scarcely yielding the common vegetables, but very populous and commercial. The aspect of the town of Hydra is very pleasant, and is said to contain nearly 20,000 inhabitants. The houses are low, mostly of stone, and convenient. The port, though not large, is deep and commodious. The number of vessels belonging to Hydra amounts to 200, carrying from 100 to 400 tons each. The Hydriot sailors are accounted the most intrepid navigators in the Archipelago. Here are upwards of 40 churches, and a large school in which the ancient Greek is taught.

Hydra, t. Africa, in Tunis, on the frontiers of Algiers; 40 SW. Kefft, 90 ESE. Constantina. It is situated in a narrow valley, with a rivulet running by it, and appears to be one of the most considerable places of this country for extent of ruins; for we have here the walls of several houses, the pavement of a whole street entire, with a variety likewise of altars and mausolea. Dr. Shaw conjectures that this is the Tynidrum or Thunodromum of the ancients.

Iceland, isl. in the North sea, belonging to Denmark, about 280 miles from E. to W., and 240 from N. to S. Lon. 10. to 25. W. Lat. 63. 15. to 67. 15. N. Sq. m. about 40,000. Pop. in 1808, 48,063. The religion is Lutheran, with one bishop, whose residence is at Reikiavik, the capital: 184 parishes. There are more than 300 churches. Iceland properly consists of a prodigious range of mountains, running from E. to W.; on the declivities of which, and in the valleys lying between them, the inhabitants live. Several of these high mountains, which are always covered with ice and snow, are called Jocheler. Snæfiel is esteemed the highest, being computed at 6,860 feet, but the volcano Hecla is the most noted. Here are also some mountains that consist only of rocks and sand, which are consequently barren. But on other mountains, situated near the coast, there are levels or plains, covered with verdure, of several miles in extent, which produce fine grass. There are no towns, properly so called; however, the houses of the Iceland Company, at the 22 ports or harbours, and of which there are 3 or 4 at each harbour, are dignified with the appellation of towns, though they are only trading places. Iceland, according to the general division, consists of 4 quarters, which derive their names from the 4 cardinal points towards which they lie. This division is caused by so many ridges of mountains that separate the quarters from each other. The climate is severe; the soil barren, stony, and rarely susceptible of cultivation; no corn is raised; no woods are seen, except a few birch trees, seldom more than 5 or 6 feet high; grass and a few hardy shrubs are almost the only natural productions. There are tolerable pastures, and potatoes have been introduced with some success.—The hot springs of Iceland, called Geysers, are a great phenomenon. They are of all temperatures, from moderate warmth to boiling point. They are situated on the west side of the island, 16 N. Skalholt. They throw jets into the air of boiling water, varying in height according to the season and temperature, commonly from 90 to 100, but sometimes more than 200 feet high. The propelling force is so great that heavy stones thrown into the opening, are instantly ejected to a great height. In the northeast part, near My Vatr, are 3 hot springs almost equal to the Geysers; also a sulphur mountain, on which are vast beds of sulphur.—The inhabitants subsist mostly on fish; their manners are exceedingly simple; their language Gothic; they are attentive to education and accustomed to read; they are grave and generally religious, and show a strong attachment to their native country. A liberal supply of bibles was sent to Iceland from Britain, in 1815, which were received by the poor natives with great thankfulness.—Their principal school is held at Bessestadt near the west coast.

Towns. The towns are all small. Vandalia is the seat of government. Some of the other most considerable towns are Edwardsville, Kaskaskia, and Shawneetown.

Government. The legislative power is vested in a house of representatives, elected biennially, not less than 27, nor more than 36 in number, till the population shall exceed 100,000; and a senate, not less than one third nor more than one half of the number of representatives. The governor, lieutenant governor, and senators are chosen for 4 years by the people. The elections are held on the 1st Monday in August, and the assembly meets on the 1st Monday in December.

Rivers. The Mississippi, Ohio, and Wabash form about two thirds of the whole boundary of this state. The other most considerable rivers are the Illinois, Kaskaskia, Muddy, Saline, Little Wabash, Michilimackinack, Crow Meadow, Rainy, Vermillion, Mine, Spoon, Rocky, and Sangamon.

Military lands. The peninsula between the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, has been surveyed as military bounty lands. Congress appropriated for this object 3,500,000 acres; and the surface actually surveyed amounts to an area about equal to 240 townships, each 6 miles square; equal to 8,640 square m., or 5,530,000 acres, nearly. It was necessary that the number surveyed should exceed the number appropriated, as the act of congress provides that the several portions granted, shall be fit for cultivation. These lands are described as being very good.

Face of the country. The southern and middle parts of the state are generally level. The banks of the Illinois and Kaskaskia, in some places, present a sublime and picturesque scenery. Several of their tributary streams have excavated for themselves deep and frightful gulfs, particularly those of the Kaskaskia, whose banks near the junction of Big Hill creek, present a perpendicular front of solid limestone 140 feet high. The northwestern part of the territory is a hilly, broken country, though there are no high mountains. The climate resembles that of Indiana and Ohio. The low and wet lands in the southern part are unhealthy.

Soil. The soil has been divided into 6 distinct kinds. 1. Bottom land, bearing a heavy growth of honey locust, pecan, black-walnut, beach, sugar maple, buckeye, pawpaw, grape vines, &c. This land is of the first quality, and is found in greater or less quantities on all the considerable rivers. It is of inexhaustible fertility, and is annually cultivated without manure. 2. Newly formed land, found at the mouths and confluences of rivers. It produces sycamore, cotton wood, water maple, water ash, elm, willow, oak, &c. There are many thousand acres of this land at the mouth of the Wabash, and at the confluence of the Ohio with the Mississippi. It is annually inundated, and is unhealthy. 3. Dry prairies, approaching the rivers and bordering on the bottom land, from 30 to 100 feet higher, and from 1 to 10 miles wide. These prairies are destitute of trees, except where they are intersected by streams of water and occasional tracts of woodland. It has been estimated that as much as two thirds of the whole territory consists of open prairie. The dry prairie has a black rich soil, well adapted to purposes of agriculture, and is covered with rank grass. 4. Wet prairie, found remote from streams, or at their sources. This is generally cold and unproductive, abounding with swamps and ponds, covered with tall coarse grass. 5. Land covered with timber, moderately hilly, well watered, and of a rich soil. 6. Hills of a sterile soil and destitute of timber, or covered with stunted oaks and pines.

Forest trees. The prevailing forest tree in Illinois is oak, of which as many as 13 or 14 different species have been enumerated. Honey locust, black-walnut, mulberry, plum, sugar maple, black locust, elm, bass wood, beach, buckeye, hackberry, coffee nut, sycamore, spice wood, sassafras, black and white haws, crab-apple, wild cherry, cucumber, and pawpaw, are found in their congenial soils throughout the territory. White pine is found on the head branches of the Illinois.

Minerals. Copper and lead are found in several parts. Coal has been discovered in several places, on the Big Muddy in great quantities near Brownsville, on the Kaskaskia near the town of that name, near the town of Edwardsville, on the Illinois, 50 miles above Illinois lake, and in other places. Salt water is found in several places sufficient to furnish immense quantities of salt. The famous salt works belonging to the U. S. are in the vicinity of Shawneetown. See Saline. Iron ore has also been discovered.

Productions. The productions are corn in abundant crops, tobacco, flax, hemp, oats, potatoes, and some cotton in the southern parts. Wheat does well when properly managed, except on the bottoms, where the soil is too rich.

Illinois, r. Illinois, formed by the junction of the Theakiki and Plein, in the northwest part of Indiana, in Lat. 41. 48. N. It passes into Illinois, pursues generally a southwesterly direction, and flows into the Mississippi, 21 miles above the Missouri. It is upwards of 400 yards wide at its mouth, and is about 400 miles long from its junction to the Mississippi, and is of easy navigation. It has a very gentle current, unbroken by falls or rapids, and passes through a fine country. The Plein, its northern head branch, interlocks with the Chicago, which flows into lake Michigan. A canal has been projected to unite the head waters of the Illinois with lake Michigan, thus forming a communication between the Mississippi and the great lakes.

Illinois, or Piora, lake, Illinois, about 20 m. long, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ wide. The river Illinois passes through it 210 miles above its mouth. It is deep and transparent, and abounds in excellent fish. The Indians inhabiting the neighbouring country are called the Illinois Indians. Lon. 89. 18. W. Lat. 40. 35. N.

Illyria, Illyris, or Illyricum, ancient country, Europe, lying along the east shore of the Adriatic, the extent of which varied considerably in different ages. The Greeks gave the name of Illyria to the whole country lying between the Adriatic and Danube. With the Romans it was more restricted ; as also in the middle ages, yet of considerable extent, comprehending the provinces of Dalmatia, Croatia, Sclavonia, Bosnia, and Servia.

Illyria, (Austrian), country, with the title of a kingdom, belonging to Austria, comprehending the southern part of ancient Illyria ; including Istria, Carniola, Carinthia, Austrian Friuli, Goritz, a part of Croatia, and several islands in the gulf of Quarnero. It is bounded by Tyrol, Stiria, Croatia, the Adriatic, and the government of Venice. Lon. 13. 14. to 16. E. Lat. 44. 30. to 46. 25. N. It is divided into 2 governments, Trieste and Laybach, which are subdivided into 9 circles, which are named from their chief towns.

The chief rivers are the Drave, Save, Laybach, and Isonzo. The country is mostly hilly or mountainous, with some fertile valleys. The mountains are generally covered with forests, and there are besides some barren tracts. The country produces vines, olives, flax, silk, great quantities of timber, and is rich in minerals, as quicksilver, cinibar, calamine, vitriol, alum, salt petre, and coal. Trieste and Fiume are the principal commercial towns.

Towns. Indianapolis is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns are Vincennes, Madison, Vevay, and Brookville. A college has been established at Vincennes.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate and house of representatives. The representatives are elected annually, and the members of the senate once in three years. The governor and lieutenant governor are elected for three years, and may be re-elected once. The legislature meets on the 1st Monday in September.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Ohio, Wabash, White river, Whitewater, Tippecanoe, Illinois, Plein, Theakiki, St. Joseph's, and St. Mary's.

Face of the country. There are no mountains in Indiana: the country, however, is more hilly than the state of Illinois, particularly towards Ohio river. A range of hills, called the Knobs, extends from the falls of the Ohio to the Wabash, in a SW. direction, which in many places produces a broken and uneven surface. North of these hills lie the flat woods, 70 miles wide. Bordering on all the principal streams, except the Ohio, there are strips of bottom and prairie land; both together from 3 to 6 miles in width. Between the Wabash and lake Michigan, the country is mostly champaign, abounding alternately with woodlands, prairies, lakes, and swamps. A range of hills runs parallel with the Ohio, from the mouth of the great Miami to Blue river, alternately approaching to within a few rods, and receding to the distance of 2 miles. Immediately below Blue river, the hills disappear, and there is presented to view an immense tract of level land, covered with a heavy growth of timber. North of the Wabash between Tippecanoe and Ouitanan, the banks of the streams are high, abrupt, and broken, and the land, except the prairies, is well timbered. Between the Plein and Theakiki, the country is flat, wet and swampy, interspersed with prairies of an inferior soil. The sources of rivers are generally in swamps or lakes, and the country around them is low, and too wet for cultivation.

Soil. There are two kinds of prairies, the river and the upland prairies: the former are bottoms destitute of timber, and are said to exhibit vestiges of former cultivation; the latter are from 30 to 100 feet more elevated, and are far more numerous and extensive. Some of them are not larger than a common field, while others extend farther than the eye can reach. They are usually bounded by heavy timbered forests, and not unfrequently adorned with copses of small trees. In spring and summer, they are covered with a luxuriant growth of grass and fragrant flowers, from 6 to 8 feet high. The soil of these plains is often as deep and fertile as the best bottoms. The prairies bordering on the Wabash are particularly rich. Wells have been dug in them, where the vegetable soil was 22 feet deep, under which was a stratum of fine white sand. The ordinary depth is from 2 to 5 feet.

Productions The principal productions of this state are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, buck wheat, potatoes, pulse, beef, pork, butter, whiskey, and peach brandy. Not far from Big Blue river there is a large cave, the entrance of which is on the side of a hill, that is about 400 feet high. Here are found great quantities of sulphate of magnesia, or Epsom salt, and of nitre, &c. The earth most strongly impregnated, yields 20 or 25 pounds of salt to a bushel.

Climate. The climate is generally healthy and pleasant, resembling that of Ohio. The Wabash is frozen over in the winter, so that it may be safely crossed on the ice. More than one half of the land in this state yet remains in the possession of the Indians.

Indianapolis. p-t. Marion co. Indiana, the seat of the state government; 80 N. Madison, on the Ohio, 110 N. by E. Louisville, W. 630. This town was laid out in Oct. 1821, and in Feb. 1822, it contained a grist mill, 2 saw mills, and 40 dwelling houses.

Indians, a name applied to the aborigines of America. These people are scattered through the extent of this vast continent, and are divided into a great number of tribes, differing from each other but little in manners and customs. The tribes usually consist of from 500 to 5,000 souls. They are tall and straight in their limbs. Their countenances are fierce, and their bodies are strong, and adapted to endure much hardship. They are hospitable and generous, but implicable in their resentments. Their occupations are hunting and war.

Some of the most numerous tribes, within the territories, belonging to the U. S., are the Creeks, Choctaws, Cherokees, and Sioux.

INDIES, (West), chain of islands between N. & S. America, extending in a curve from the Florida shore to near the mouth of the Orinoco; Cuba forming the western limit, and Trinidad the southern. They were named West Indies by Columbus, under the notion that they formed a part of the Indian continent.

Climate. The climate is hot and unhealthy, but the heat is much tempered by sea and land breezes. The seasons are divided into wet and dry. The wet or rainy seasons are two, one in the spring, but the principal one in autumn, when the quantity of rain is very great. Snow and ice are unknown. From the beginning of August to the latter end of October, these islands are subject to dreadful hurricanes, which rage with great fury, and often do extensive injury. Earthquakes and violent thunder and lightning are also common.

Productions. The soil of most of these islands is extremely fertile. The most important production is the sugar cane, which affords great quantities of sugar; also rum and molasses. Other productions are, coffee, cotton, ginger, indigo, pimento, cocoa, tobacco, &c.; also excellent fruits, as oranges, lemons, limes, pomegranates, pine apples, melons, &c. The mountains abound in valuable trees, as cedars, lignumvitæ, mahogany, &c.

Possessors. St. Domingo is in possession of the blacks; Cuba and Porto Rico belong to Spain; Guadaloupe, Martinico, and Mariegalante, to France; St. Eustatia, Curaçoa, and the level of the sea. Though situated in the northern part of Tyrol, it has long been the seat of the local government and of the high courts of justice. It contains a government house, town house, opera, arsenal, barracks, and 9 churches. The public edifices are more remarkable for size than elegance. Within the walls and gates it is not large, but it contains extensive suburbs. A university was founded here in 1672; but it has been suppressed, and its place is now supplied by a lycuem, a medical school, an establishment styled the general seminary for Tyrol. The town has considerable trade, and a manufacture of cotton. The Innthal, or valley of the Inn, in which Innsbruck stands, is 30 miles in length, the largest and most picturesque, formed by the northern Alps.

Buen-Ayre, to the Netherlands; St. Bartholomew to Sweden; Margarita forms a part of Venezuela; the remainder belong to Great Britain. The most considerable islands are the 4 Great Antilles, Cuba, St. Domingo, Jamaica and Porto Rico.

It is a royal burgh, and has a safe and commodious harbour. It is the emporium and common centre of intercourse of the northern counties, and has long been considered as the metropolis of the Highlands. It is a handsome town, and has many elegant buildings. The manufactures of the town are leather, coarse hempen cloth, bagging, sacking, &c., linen, and thread. The memorable battle of Culloden was fought near this town. Inverness has a flourishing royal academy, with from 200 to 300 scholars, a royal infirmary, 3 printing offices, from 2 of which newspapers are issued; 3 presbyterian churches, besides 1 of Episcopalians, and a place of worship for Methodists.

Inverness-shire, co. Scotland, bounded N. by Ross, E. by Murray and Nairn, S. by Perth and Argyle, and W. by the sea. It is divided into 3 districts, Inverness-shire Proper, Lochaber, and Badenoch; and includes several of the Hebrides, or Western islands, viz. Skye, Barra, North and South Uist, Benbecula, St. Kilda, Rona, Rasa, Rum, and some others, with the peninsula of Harris. Independent of the islands, it measures 94 miles from E. to W. and 50 from N. to S. It abounds with oak and fir timber, and mines of iron ore; the pastures feed numbers of cattle. Pop. 78,336.

Iona, I-colum-kill, I-columb-kill, called by Bede Hii, but its proper name is I, pronounced like ee, which signifies an island; one of the Western islands of Scotland, separated from the western part of Mull by a narrow channel; 36 miles distant from the mainland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, 1 on an average, broad; containing 1,300 acres. Pop. 386. It is the property of the duke of Argyll, and produces good crops of barley and oats, and has excellent pasture; and abounds in a variety of minerals.

In 563, St. Columba, a native of Ireland, landed upon this island, and after this event it became celebrated as a seat of learning and piety. It was erected into a bishop's see, and became the head of the Christian church in Scotland, whither the young princes of Scotland and Northumberland were sent for education; it was also honoured with frequent visits from the neighbouring potentates of ancient times, while others sought an asylum here from the cares of the world. There are considerable ruins of the cathedral and other buildings, and in the burying place there are numerous tombstones. In this enclosure lie the remains of 48 kings of Scotland, 4 of Ireland, 8 of Norway, and 1 France, who were ambitious of reposing in this consecrated ground.

This republic was put under the protection of Great Britain, in 1815, by the congress of Vienna, and a constitution was drawn up and ratified by the British government in 1817. The legislative power is vested in a senate of 29 members, from the several islands.—The coasts of the islands are rugged, the surface uneven, containing a number of barren rocks and some high hills, interspersed with fertile plains and valleys. The climate is very mild, but subject to sudden changes. The productions are corn, vines, olives, currants, cotton, honey, wax, &c. Vines and olives form the chief source of income to the inhabitants. The currants, and small dried grapes, are exported in large quantities.—The inhabitants are mostly Greeks, and of the Greek church.

Divisions. Ireland is divided into 4 provinces, Ulster, Leinster, Connought, and Munster, which are subdivided into 32 counties, containing 3,436 parishes.

Towns. The chief towns are Dublin, the capital, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Belfast, Kilkenny, Drogheda, Dundalk, Galway, Newry, Londonderry, Wexford, Kinsale, Sligo, and Armagh.

Government. Ireland forms a part of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. See Great Britain.

Religion. The established religion of Ireland is the same as that of England, yet two thirds or three fourths of the inhabitants are Catholics. In the establishment there are 4 archbishoprics, viz. Armagh, Dublin, Cashel, and Tuam; and 18 bishoprics. In the northern counties the Presbyterians are the most numerous class of Protestants.

Education. There is a university in Dublin, and a royal Catholic college at Maynooth. Education among the great mass of the people has heretofore been lamentably neglected, but of late, exertions have been made to extend its advantages.

Inhabitants. The great mass of the people are sunk in ignorance and poverty. Their common food is potatoes and milk, their fuel, turf; and they are miserably lodged. According to the returns in 1791, there were 701,102 houses, of which 112,556 were inhabited by paupers, and 515,346, not inhabited by paupers, had only one hearth.

Commerce, &c. The principal exports are linen, butter, wheat, flour, oats, beef, pork, &c. The exports, in 1815, amounted to £7,139,435. Of the manufactures, linen is the most important. Cotton is also manufactured to considerable extent; also a good deal is done at distillation and brewing.

Rivers, &c. The principal rivers are the Shannon, Barrow, Foyle, Bann, Liffey, Blackwater, Boyne, Slaney, Bandon, Lee, and Suir. The most considerable lakes are Lough Neagh, Lough Erne, Lough Corrib, and the lake of Killarney.

Face of the country, &c. The face of the country is agreeably diversified; but a small part of it is mountainous. The mountains are chiefly in the western parts. One of the most striking features is the immense extent of bogs, which disfigure the country. The soil is generally a fertile loam of no great depth, with a rocky substratum.

Productions. The principal productions are grass, potatoes, oats, wheat, barley, flax, hemp, &c. Oats are extensively used for food. It is calculated, that throughout the country there are 10 acres of oats to one of all other kinds of grain. Ireland has been long celebrated for its immense quantities of potatoes, as well as for their excellent quality.

Climate. The climate is healthy and temperate; cooler in summer and warmer in winter than England; but humid, and often foggy. At Limerick the thermometer never rises above 72 deg., or sinks below 28 deg.—There are neither moles nor toads, nor any kind of serpents in Ireland.

Minerals. Marble of great beauty is found in several counties. Mines of coal, lead, iron, and copper are not unfrequent.

Ismail, or Ismailow, t. Russ. in Bessarabia, on N. side of the Danube, about 33 miles from the Black Sea ; 144 SW. Otchakov, 268 N. Constantinople. Lon. 28. 50. E. Lat. 45. 21. N. Pop. 10,000. The town of Ismail contains 17 mosques, and measures about a mile toward the land, and half a mile by the side of the Danube, and was fortified with 8 bastions. The ramparts are in general 18 feet in height, in some parts 25.—This place was taken by storm, on the 22d of December, 1790, by the Russians, under General Suwarrow : the Russians were several times repulsed, and lost, in the siege, 10,000 men. According to the account, as published at Petersburg, the Turkish garrison were put to death after the surrender, and 30,000 men massacred in cold blood. The booty found was immense ; 230 pieces of cannon, many magazines, powder, bombs, and balls ; 345 standards, an abundance of provisions, 10,000 horses, &c., to the value, as calculated, of 10,000,000 piastres.

It is the residence of a pacha. The Greeks and Armenians have each an archbishop residing here. It has a delightful situation, but exhibits no traces of its former greatness. Nicomedia was once a large and beautiful city, the capital Bithynia, and for a short time of the Roman empire.

It is situated on a lake which abounds with fish, and has a communication with the sea of Marmora. It was for a short time the capital or Bithynia. The ancient walls are 4 miles in circuit, but the space between them is filled up with ruins, gardens, tobacco plantations, and about 100 wretched hovels, built of mud and wood. Silk forms the principle article of trade. The celebrated council of Nice was held here in 325, and the Nicene creed promulgated as the article of faith. A second council was held here in 787.

Ispahan, Isfahán or Spahawn, (an. Aspadona,) city, Persia, in Irak, formerly the capital of the whole country ; 260 NE. Bassora. Lon. 51. 50 E. Lat. 32. 25. N. The population was formerly estimated by some travellers, probably with much exaggeration, at 1,100,000. Chardin, in 1686, stated it 600,000. According to Olivier, it was reduced, in 1796 to 50,000. In 1800 it was stated at 100,000. Morier stated it in 1808, from Persian authorities, at 400,000 ; but in his second journey, at 60,000. Kinnier states it at 200,000. According to Chardin, the walls were 24 miles in circuit, and contained 162 mosques, 48 colleges, 1,802 caravanseras, and 273 public baths. A great part of the city is at present a mass of ruins, with here and there an inhabited house. It is situated on the river Zenderout. Under the caliphs of Bagdad it became the capital of the province of Irak. Being situated in the centre of the empire, and surrounded by the most fertile territories, it soon became a place of great population, wealth, and trade. In 1387 it was taken by Timur Bec, and the citizens were given up to indiscriminate massacre, and 70,000 are said to have perished. Shah Abbas made it the seat of his empire, and spared no cost in embellishing it with the most splendid edifices. In 1722 it was taken by the Afghans, but in 1727 it was retaken by Nadir Shah ; since which it has not been a royal residence. The great palace built of Shah Abbas, is said to have been 5 miles in circuit ; a great part of which space, however, was laid out in gardens, 10 in number, adorned with summer houses, and other elegant structures. The walls and buildings of this palace remain nearly entire, but it has been stripped of nearly all its costly furniture, and every thing valuable that could be removed. The square, called Meyden, was equally distinguished ; $\frac{1}{3}$ m. in length ; formerly encircled by a canal, bordered with plane trees ; but all vestiges of both are now obliterated. Another remarkable object is the Chaur Baug, (four gardens,) a name given to an avenue of more than a mile, reaching from the Meyden to the mountains east of Ispahan, composed of 4 rows of large and beautiful plane trees, with canals and basins to receive the waters of the Zenderout. There are several handsome bridges in the city, and the mosques display great magnificence. The private buildings have a mean appearance ; built of bricks dried in the sun ; but within they are handsome and convenient. The streets are narrow, winding, irregular, unpaved, and very dusty. When Ispahan was in its prosperity, its suburbs were distinguished for their extent and beauty. The principal one, Julfa, is now reduced from 12,000 to 600 families, Armenians, Circassians, and Georgians. The manufactures of the city are still extensive, and it is famous for its gold brocade. It is also the emporium of the inland commerce of Persia.

ITALY, country, Europe, forming a large peninsula, bounded N. by Switzerland and Germany, E. by Carniola and the Adriatic, S. & SW. by the Mediterranean, and W. towards the N. by France. Its length is about 700 m.; its breadth very unequal; on the north, along the Alps, about 350, in the middle about 140, and at the extremity of Calabria 75. Its form has been compared to a boot.

Divisions. Italy is divided by geographers into three parts; 1st Northern Italy, including Piedmont & the other continental dominions of the king of Sardinia, the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, or Austrian Italy, and the duchies of Parma and Modena; 2d Central Italy, comprising the Ecclesiastical State, Tuscany, and the districts of Lucca, Massa di Carrara, and St. Marino; 3d, Southern Italy, consisting of the kingdom of Naples, or the Two Sicilies.

Italy comprises the 9 following independent states.

	Sq. m.	Pop.
Kingdom of Naples.....	43,600.....	6,712,000
Kingdom of Sardinia.....	27,400.....	3,994,000
Lombardo-Venetian km.....	18,290.....	4,121,000

States of Parma.....	2,280.....	377,000
States of Modena.....	2,060.....	370,000
Duchy of Lucca.....	420.....	138,000
Republic of St. Marino.....	40.....	7,000
	117,090	19,245,000

The islands of Sicily, Sardinia, the Lipari islands, and Elba, are included in the above table. Corsica belongs to France; and Malta, Gozzo, and Camino belong to Great Britain. Savoy, forming a part of the kingdom of Sardinia, and included in the above table, is properly no part of Italy.

Cities. The chief cities are Rome, Naples, Palermo, Milan, Venice, Turin, Florence, Genoa, Messina, Catania, Bologna, and Leghorn.

Religion. The established religion throughout Italy is the Roman Catholic, but all other sects are tolerated. There are 38 archbishops; the number of suffragans is indefinite, the pope creating and suppressing them at pleasure. The number of inferior ecclesiastics is very great.

Universities, &c. The Universities are those of Rome, Bologna, Padua, Parma, Pisa, Pavia, Naples, Salerno, Ferrara, Florence, Sienna, Genoa, Macerata, Perugia, Turin, Palermo, Catania, and Cagliari. There are learned societies, under the name of academies, at Florence, Rome, Milan, Bologna, &c. The brilliant period of Italian literature was the 15th century.

Language. The Italian language is derived from the Latin, and is spoken throughout Italy, but with various degrees of purity.

Inhabitants. The Italians are well made, temperate, lively, passionately fond of music; irritable, revengeful, and superstitious.

Rivers and Lakes. The country is exceedingly well watered with rivers, lakes, and springs. The principal rivers are the Po, Adige, Brenta, Arno, Tiber, and Volturno. The largest lakes are Garda, Lago Maggiore, or Locarno, Lugano, Como, Lecco, Iseo, Perugia, Bolsena, Celano, and Averno.

Mountains. The Alps lie on the north. The Apennines extend through the peninsula. Etna and Vesuvius are celebrated volcanoes.

Aspect of the country. Nothing can exceed the beauty and diversity of the natural scenery. The mountains present every variety of form and elevation, with all the component parts of picturesque beauty; and the valleys are exceedingly delightful.

Climate. The climate is regarded as the finest in Europe, but varies considerably in different parts. Some parts are unhealthy in the summer and autumn; particularly the district, styled the Maremma, extending from Leghorn to Terracina, about 200 long, and 40 broad.

Soil and productions. A large proportion of the soil is fertile, and the country presents a rich and varied spectacle of natural products. Good cultivation is confined to the northern part; in the middle and south, agriculture is in a very backward state. The principal productions are vines, olives, various other excellent fruits; corn, rice, pulse, and various other vegetables; cotton, &c.—It has also marble & other valuable minerals, and its pastures are well stocked with cattle, sheep, and goats.

Italy, (Austrian,) called the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, kingdom of Upper Italy, belonging to the house of Austria; bounded N. by Switzerland and Austria, E. by Carniola, SE. by the Adriatic, S. by the States of the Church, Modena, and Parma, and W. by Piedmont. Lon. 8. 31. to 13. 30. E. Lat. 44. 54. to 46. 40. N. It is divided into two governments, Milan and Venice, which are separated from each other by the Mincio.

Total.....18,290 4,014,000

Pop. in 1819, stated at 4,121,560

With the exception of the territory bordering on Switzerland and Germany, the country is generally level, consisting of large and beautiful plains, of great fertility, and in a high state of cultivation. It is frequently styled the garden of Europe. The productions are corn, wheat, rice, vines, fruit, silk, flax, hemp, Parmesan or Lodesan cheese, honey, &c. The country is watered by the Po and its branches; also by the Adige, Brenta, Piave, Livenza, Tagliamento, and Isonzo.—Though declared to form a monarchy inseparable from the Austrian empire, it has a separate constitution, and is governed by a viceroy, whose residence is at Milan. The administration of each of the two divisions is in the hands of a governor and government college, in subordination to the court of Vienna.

Ivory Coast, country, Africa, situated on the Atlantic, between Cape Appolonia and Cape Palmas, containing several towns, which are situated at the mouths of rivers called by the same names. The interior country is but little known, the natives refusing the Europeans leave to build settlements, or even to trade among them, except by means of the coast negroes, and even this with the most circumspect caution. The chief commodities are gold, ivory, and slaves, the former in the greatest plenty, but no regular tariff, or table, of the different proportions of each was ever settled. The inhabitants of this district have the reputation of being the most savage and barbarous on the whole coast; and some writers scruple not to call them, anthropophagi.

Jaen, pr. Spain, bounded N. by La Mancha, E. by Murcia and Grenada, S. by Grenada, and W. by Cordova; about 60 miles from N. to S., and nearly as much from E. to W.; almost wholly surrounded with mountains, which afford mines of lead, copper, and silver. It was a kingdom in the time of the Moors. The principal towns are Jaen, Baeça, Ubeda, Caçorla, and Caslona. Pop. in 1797, 213,005. Sq. m. 4,727.

Jaen, city, Spain, capital of a province of the same name, on a small river, which soon after runs into the Guadalquivir; 36 N. Grenada, 45 E. Cordova. Lon. 3. 51. W. Lat. 37. 53. N. Pop. 27,500. It is surrounded with walls, and defended by some ramparts, towers, and a castle. It is tolerably large, and contains 3 parish churches, 8 convents, and 14 hospitals, and is well supplied with water by numerous fountains, one of which, in particular, issues out of a rock, in a stream sufficient to form a brook. The country about is exceedingly fertile in corn, wine, and oil, with abundance of silk, and the most excellent fruits.

Jaen, or Bracamoros, government, S. A., in New Grenada. The climate is mild, and all the necessities of life are produced in abundance. The culture of tobacco forms the principal business of the inhabitants, the gold mines being abandoned. Rain is frequent. Jaen is the capital.

Jaffa, (an. Joppa, and Japha), t. Palestine, near the coast of the Mediterranean; 34 WNW. Jerusalem, 40 N. Gaza, 45 S. Acre. Lon. 35. 3. E. Lat. 32. 5. N. Pop. according to Hassel, 7,000; and according to Mr. Connor, in 1820, only 3,000 Turks, 400 Greek Scismatics, 100 Latins, and 30 Armenians. It was formerly a celebrated city, and is frequently mentioned in the scriptures, being the port whence Jonah embarked for Tarshish, and the place where Peter raised Tabitha from the dead. It owes its celebrity to its situation with regard to Jerusalem, being the port of that city, and in ancient times it was the only place resorted to as a seaport in all Judea. As a station for vessels, its harbour is one of the worst in the Mediteranean; ships generally anchor about a mile from the town to avoid the shoals and rocks. It is now inhabited by Turks or Arabs, with a mixture of Greeks, Maronites, and Armenians. This part of the coast is, in general, but little above the level of the sea; but the town is built on an eminence, in the form of a sugar loaf, in height about 130 feet perpendicular. The houses distributed on the declivity, appear rising above each other, like the steps of an amphitheatre. On the summit is a small citadel, which commands the town; the bottom of the hill is surrounded by a wall without a rampart, of 12 or 14 feet high, and 2 or 3 in thickness. This wall, which has no ditch, is environed by gardens, where lemons, oranges, and citrons, in this light soil, grow to a very large size.

Jamaica, one of the West India islands, the largest and most important of those which belong to Great Britain; 30 leagues W. St. Domingo, 30 S. Cuba. Lon. 76. 45. W. Lat. 18. 12. N. It is of an oval form, 150 miles long, and on an average, about 40 broad. It is divided into 3 counties, Middlesex, Surry, and Cornwall; subdivided into parishes. The principal towns are Spanish town, the capital, Kingston, Port Royal, Savanna la Mur, Falmouth, and Montego Bay.

A range, called Blue mountains, extends through the island from east to west; rising in its most elevated peaks to 7,431 feet above the sea. On the north side the land rises from the shore into hills, beautifully rounded, and covered with groves of pimento; on the south side the Blue mountains present abrupt precipices and inaccessible cliffs. The soil in some places is deep and fertile; but Edwards pronounces it to be generally an unfruitful and laborious country. He calculates it to contain 4,080,000 acres; not more than 1,000,000 acres under cultivation; about 3,000,000 irreclaimable wilderness, a great part consisting of inaccessible fastnesses. The island is well watered by about 100 rivers, and in the mountains are numerous springs, some of which are medicinal. The climate on the plains is hot; the thermometer from June to Nov. standing at 80 deg.; from Dec. to May, ranging from 70 to 80 deg.

The most important productions are sugar, indigo, cotton, and coffee; also cocoa, pimento, ginger, maize, Guinea corn, rice, garden vegetables, and fruits. In 1790, 105,000 hhds. of sugar were exported; in 1802, 140,000 hhds. Export of coffee in 1804, 22,000,000 lbs.; in 1807, 28,500,000 lbs. Total value of exports, in 1809, £3,033,234; imports 4,068,897. Pop. in 1787, 290,000; whites 30,000; free people of colour 10,000; slaves 250,000. Slaves, in 1812, 319,912; total estimated at 359,912.

James River, r. Virginia, formed by the union of Jackson's and Cowpasture rivers. At the point where it begins to break through the Blue Ridge, it is joined by North river. It passes by the flourishing towns of Lynchburg, and Richmond, and communicates, through Hampton Road and the mouth of the Chesapeake bay, with the Atlantic. Its general course is S. of E. A 40 gun ship may go up to Jamestown, and by lightening herself, to Harrison's bar, where there are 15 feet of water. Vessels of 250 tons go up to Warwick, and those of 120 to Rockets, just below Richmond. And the river is navigable for batteaux 220 miles above Richmond. This river opens a navigation into a country abounding in tobacco, wheat, corn, hemp, coal, &c.

JAPAN, extensive empire, Asia, composed of three principal islands, and some other very small ones: the island of Jesso is also tributary to Japan. Lon. 129. to 141. E. Lat. 31. to 42. N. Sq. m. according to Gatterer, 182,000.

Islands.	Length.	Breadth.
Nippon.....	700 miles.....	200.
Ximo.....	200.....	140
Xicoco.....	90.....	50

Population. Japan is described as very populous, but the amount of population is uncertain, and variously estimated; by Cannabich, from 10, to 15,000,000; by Hassel and others, from 15, to 30,000,000; and by some as high as 50,000,000.

Cities. The chief cities are Jeddo, the capital, Meaco, and Nangasaki.

Government. The government presents a singular anomaly in the combined dominion of a spiritual and a temporal ruler. The former, called the Dairi, has his residence at Meaco; the secular emperor, called the Cubo Sama, resides at Jeddo, in a fortified palace, and has a revenue estimated at £28,000,000.

Inhabitants. The Japanese are an intelligent, ingenious, and active people. They have made considerable advances in literature and science; and especially in the arts and manufactures. Their manufactures consist principally of silk, cotton, and lacquered ware, called Japanned ware. Their varnish is inimitable: it is made of the milky juice of a tree.

Face of the country, &c. The general aspect of these islands is rugged and irregular, bristling with mountains, hills, and rocks. The mountain of Fusi, in the southern part, supposed to be the loftiest, is always covered with snow. The coasts are rocky and precipitous. The country is well watered, but a great part of the soil is not naturally fertile, but being cultivated with the most unremitting industry, is rendered productive. Rice forms the principal article of food. Beans, barley, and a variety of vegetables, figs, oranges, lemons, and other fruits, are common.

Minerals. Japan is very rich in mineral productions, which consist of gold, copper, sulphur, coal, some iron and tin; also naptha, agates, cornelian, and jaspers. Pearls, amber-grise, and camphire, are also abundant. Nine tenths of the exports consist of copper; other articles are camphire, japanned ware, painted paper, &c.

Java, a large island in the Eastern seas, belonging to the Netherlands ; 642 miles in length, and 128 where widest, and about 85 on an average, in breadth. Lon. 105. to 114. 45. E. Lat. 5. 45. to 8. 48. S. Sq. m. 51,000. Pop. in 1815, 4,615,270. The inhabitants are chiefly composed of Javanese and Malays, and are Mahometans. There is a considerable proportion of Chinese on the coasts and in the seaports.

The island is divided nearly in its whole length by a range of mountains extending from E. to W. Many of the summits are volcanic. The coasts are low and marshy, and the climate hot and unhealthy ; but in the interior and elevated parts, it is more salubrious and temperate. It is watered by numerous streams, and the coast is indented by a number of fine bays, as those of Bantam, Batavia, Cheribon, Samarang, Joana, and Sourabaya. Batavia is the capital of the Dutch East India possessions. The native capital is Sura-kerta.

Java possesses a soil of extraordinary fertility. In no part of the world is vegetation more luxuriant, or the wants of man more easily supplied. The staple production is rice, which is raised in such abundance that the island has been called the granary of the east. Sugar, pepper, coffee, and cotton are very important productions. Other articles of export are indigo, teak timber, spices brought from the Moluccas, tin from Banca, cotton, yarn, salt, and edible birds' nests.—Java abounds in a variety of plants, fruits, valuable trees, animals, birds, and fishes.

The literary and scientific world were imposed upon by an account of the upas, or poison tree of Java, published in Holland in 1780. It was described as situated in the centre of the island, and destroying, by its noxious effluvia, all animal and vegetable life in its vicinity, to the extent of 10 or 12 miles around. It is now ascertained that this tree has no real existence. There are, however, trees in Java, from which a poison is extracted ; one in particular, which is used by the natives of Macassar to poison their arrows. A wound inflicted by an instrument dipped in the poison, causes almost instant death. This tree has no bad effects on the atmosphere, and it is usually surrounded by a luxuriant vegetation.

Jeddo, Jedo, or Yeddo, city, Japan, capital of the empire, at the head of a large bay, at the mouth of a river, in SE. of Nippon; 160 E. by N. Meaco. Lon. 140. E. Lat. 36. 30. N. The population has heretofore been estimated at 1,000,000. In 1812-13, the Japanese stated to Golowan, that the population exceeded 10,000,000; that in the principal streets were 280,000 houses, each containing from 30 to 40 persons; and that in the city there were 36,000 blind men. Meaco was formerly the capital, and is still the residence of the spiritual emperor; but the civil and military emperor has his residence at Jeddo. This city is 7 miles long, 5 broad, and 20 in circuit. It has no walls, except those which surround the palace. It is said not to be surpassed in magnificence by any city in Asia, since, besides the usual accompaniments of a capital, all the princes and great men are obliged to make it their residence for half of the year. It contains, therefore, many splendid palaces, which stand by themselves, surrounded by large court-yards and stately gates, and, though built only of wood, and one story high, are distinguished by varnished stair cases, large and finely ornamented apartments.

The palace of the emperor may be properly called a great fortified city. It is situated in the heart of the general city, said to be 5 leagues in circuit, surrounded with walls and ditches, and containing several fortified buildings, which have the appearance of castles. The outer part is composed of streets, containing many palaces, in which reside the princes of the blood, ministers and other public functionaries. In the centre is the emperor's palace, the body of it being of only one high story, but adorned with a square tower raised many stories high. Unlike all other Japanese structures, it is well built of free stone, and is surrounded by a wall of the same material. The city is intersected by branches of the river, and by canals. It is the seat of an extensive commerce, and has many flourishing manufactures. It is greatly exposed to the ravages of fire. In 1658, 100,000 houses were reduced to ashes in 48 hours.

It is near the Saale, which washes it on the E. and S. sides ; in a pleasant valley, among rising hills, which produce great quantities of wine. It forms an oblong square, and is surrounded with walls, ditches, and towers, and has some manufactures of linen and hats. But it is distinguished chiefly for its university, founded in 1558, one of the most celebrated in Germany.

One half of it belongs to the duke of Weimar; the other half to Saxe-Gotha, Saxe-Coburg, and Saxe-Meiningen. It consists of 4 faculties, divinity, law, medicine, and philosophy, which are taught by 18 regular, and 15 extraordinary professors; there are besides, 10 or 12 private teachers in the town. The number of students, in 1817, was 659. There are belonging to the university a church, class rooms for the 4 faculties, a public hall, an observatory, a celebrated anatomical theatre, a repository for archives, a large library, a lying-in hospital, a good botanical garden, &c. There are two distinguished literary societies, and the literary journals of this place are of great repute in Germany.

Jericho, p-v. in Oyster Bay, Long island, N. Y.; W. 251.

Jericho, now called Rihha, or Ryhad, t. Palestine, about five miles from the river Jordan; 17 ENE. Jerusalem. It was formerly celebrated for the number of palm-trees growing near it, and on that account called The City of Palms. This city was the first in Canaan which fell into the power of the Israelites, after their entrance into the Land of Promise; and its walls fell down before the Ark of the Covenant, on the first sound of the trumpets, in the year of the world 2584, and before Jesus Christ 1469.

Jericho is situated in a plain, bounded by different mountains on the SW., W. and N. Its walls were 20 stadia, or $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circ. It was one of the cities appropriated to the residence of the priests and Levites, of whom 12,000 dwelt here. In the time of our Saviour it yielded only to Jerusalem for its size and the magnificence of its buildings. In this city Christ performed several miracles. It was often honoured with the presence of the kings, who ornamented it with palaces, circusses, and amphitheatres. It is at present nothing more than an assemblage of huts built of earth and reeds, covered with a species of dried fern; inhabited, in 1820, by about 300 miserable Arabs. Nothing remains of its ancient edifices but a kind of tower, three parts demolished, and the ruins of some walls, which display very little that is remarkable. The plain of Jericho is about 20 m. in length, and 10 in breadth. Of all the productions of Jericho, the most common is the balm of Gilead.

Jerusalem, city, Asia, cap. of ancient Judea, and of modern Palestine, in the pachalic of Damascus; 34 ESE. Jaffa, its port; 120 SSW. Damascus. Lon. 35. 20. E. Lat. 31. 48. N. It is supposed to have been founded by Melchizedek, and originally named Salem, translated Solyima by Josephus. It was afterwards possessed by the Jebusites, and called Jebus. In 1048 B. C., it was taken by David, became the seat of his kingdom, and was named Jerusalem; in Latin authors Hierosolyma. Some suppose it to be called Cadytis, by Herodotus. It was situated on the borders of the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, so that it was sometimes considered as belonging to the one, and sometimes to the other; being built on several hills, the most elevated of which was Mount Zion, forming the southern quarter of the city. Mount Moriah formed the eastern part, Mount Acra the western, and Mount Bezeta was situated to the north.

In its most flourishing times, Jerusalem was divided into 4 parts, each inclosed within its own walls. 1. The part on Mount Zion, the old city of Jebus, afterwards styled the City of David. 2. The Lower City, on Mount Acra, called also the Daughter of Zion. 3. The New City, inhabited by tradesmen, artificers, and merchants. 4. Mount Moriah, on which was built the temple of Solomon. The temple was dedicated B. C. 1004; and B. C. 586, it was demolished, and the walls of the city razed by Nebuchadnezzar. The second temple, built by the order of Cyrus, was finished B. C. 515, and destroyed A. D. 70.

During the reign of Tiberius, Jerusalem was rendered memorable in all succeeding ages, by the death and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who, according to the common computation, was crucified on Friday, April 3, at 3 o'clock P. M., at the age of 33, on Mount Calvary, a hill, which was then without the walls, on the NW. side of the city.

Jerusalem was taken and destroyed by Titus, A. D. 70. At the seige, according to Josephus, 97,000 prisoners fell into the hands of the conqueror, and the whole number slain and taken prisoners, during the seven years' war, was 1,462,000. In 130, Adrian undertook to rebuild the city, and gave it the name of Ælia, or Ælia Capitolina, which name it bore till the time of Constantine. It was taken, in 614, by the Persians; in 636, by the Saracens, under caliph Omar; and in 1099, by the Crusaders, under Godfrey of Bouillon, who founded a kingdom, which lasted till 1187, when it was taken by Saladin, king of Egypt. In 1517, Selim, emperor of the Turks, annexed it, together with all Syria, to the Turkish empire, under which it still continues. It is called by them Cudsembaric, or Coudsheriff. The Orientals, however, generally call it El Kods, or Heleods, i. e. The Holy, sometimes adding El-Sheriff, The Noble.

Jerusalem is now greatly reduced from its ancient size and importance. Its population has been variously stated by vague conjecture; by Volney, in 1783, at 12, or 14,000; by Browne, in 1797, at 18, or 20,000; by Ali Bey, in 1807, at nearly 30,000; 20,000 Christians, Greeks, Catholics, Maronites, Armenians, &c.; 7,000 Mahometans, and a few Jews; by Light, in 1814, at 12,000; and by a Jewish priest, in 1815, at 50,000. It is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in circuit; the streets are narrow, but straight, and well paved. The houses are generally well built of stone, for the most part of 2 or 3 stories, with a plain, simple front, without windows in the lower story, so that it has been said, that a passenger, walking in the streets, may conceive himself in the corridor of a vast prison; the doors, besides, are so low, that a person must bend almost double in order to enter. The roofs are either terraced or rise in domes, and the dull uniformity of the whole is interrupted by the steeples of the mosques and churches. Jerusalem is the residence of a Greek patriarch, and, according to a statement of Mr. Parsons, in 1821, contains 11 mosques, 5 synagogues, and 20 monasteries, belonging to different denominations. The most splendid edifice, by far, now in the city, is a mosque built by the Saracens, under caliph Omar, in the seventh century, on the site of the temple. This edifice appeared to Dr. Clarke superior to any other specimen of modern architecture in the Turkish empire, even to the celebrated mosque of St. Sophia. The building, which has always been the object of visitation and respect to Christian pilgrims, is called the church of the Holy Sepulchre, and was built by the empress Helena, and supposed to include all the spots connected with the crucifixion and entombment of our Saviour. It is a very handsome building, 300 feet long, and nearly 200 broad. It embraces various apartments belonging to the different denominations of Christians. The tomb, which is in the central part, has the appearance of a superb mausoleum; the surface covered with rich damask hangings, striped with gold. In the interior is a stone 8 feet long, and $2\frac{1}{8}$ broad, raised about two feet. On this slab the body of our Lord is said to have been deposited; and over it are suspended 44 lamps, which are mostly of silver, but a few are of gold, and are ever burning.

The modern city is chiefly built on Mount Moriah. The ascents on all sides, except the north, are steep. It is almost surrounded by valleys encompassed by mountains, so that it seems to be situated in the middle of an amphitheatre. It has some trade, and forms a kind of central point between Arabia, Egypt, and Syria; but it derives a great part of its support from the visits of pilgrims; the number of those who visited it, in 1819, was stated at 3,191; the number present at the passover, in 1821, 2,706; 1,400 Armenians, 1,200 Greeks, 70 Copts, 20 Syrians, 15 Catholics, and 1 Abyssinian. The country about Jerusalem is described by Dr. Clarke, as exceedingly fertile, and admirably cultivated; "the Eden of the East, rejoicing in the abundance of its wealth."

Dr. Clarke, speaking of the appearance of the city on his approaching towards it, says: "We were not prepared for the grandeur of the spectacle, which it exhibited. Instead of a wretched and ruined town, by some described, as the desolated remnant of Jerusalem, we beheld, as it were, a flourishing and stately metropolis, presenting a magnificent assemblage of domes, towers, palaces, churches, and monasteries; all of which, glittering in the sun's rays, shone with inconceivable splendor."

"There is," says the same author, "much at Jerusalem, independently of its monks, and monasteries, to repay pilgrims of a different description from those who usually resort thither, for all the fatigue and danger they must encounter. At the same time, to men interested in tracing, within the walls, antiquities referred to by documents of sacred history, no spectacle can be more mortifying than the city in its present state. The mistaken piety of the early Christians, in attempting to preserve, either confused or annihilated the memorials it endeavoured to perpetuate."

Jews, an appellation, which, in its most extensive sense, comprehends the Israelites generally; but in a more restricted and proper sense, it includes those, who belonged to the tribe of Judah, and who inhabited Judea. With regard to the Ten Tribes, they were carried captive by the Assyrians, B. C. 721, and it has been a prevalent opinion, that they were wholly lost. Sir William Jones, however, is of opinion, that the Afghans are descended from these tribes; and Dr. Claudius Buchanan supposes, that the "Ancient or Black Jews" of India are derived from the same origin.

The dispersion of the Jews, properly so called, and the end of their national existence, took place on the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, A. D. 70. Since that event, they have never been able to gain a settlement in the land of their ancestors, but have been dispersed into almost every country on the globe; and, notwithstanding they have been subjected to almost every species of insult, oppression, and cruelty, yet they still exist, a distinct people, unincorporated with the inhabitants of the countries in which they reside, and remain a monument of the truth of Christianity, which they almost universally reject. As a specimen of the sufferings, which they have endured, it may be mentioned, that a fatal endemic distemper, which, in 1348, raged in a great part of Europe, was ascribed to their having poisoned the springs and wells; in consequence of which 1,500,000 of them were massacred! Of late, they have been treated with more justice and humanity, and the cup of their woes, it may be hoped, is nearly exhausted.

The Jews are generally addicted to trade and commerce, and many of them are wealthy. Formerly, a great part of the retail trade of Europe, and particularly of Germany, was in their hands. They have long occupied a conspicuous place in the population of Poland, and are supposed to be more numerous in the Polish countries, than in all the rest of Europe. They are the men of business for almost the whole country; the current money of the kingdom is chiefly in their hands; and a great proportion of the lands is mortgaged to them. They have the chief management of trade in the Barbary states in the north of Africa. They have produced a considerable number of men distinguished for literature and science.—Their numbers have been variously estimated from 3, to 9,000,000. Bishop Gregoire estimates them at 4, or 5,000,000. Hassel estimates them at 5,000,000, and the number in Europe at 1,179,500; but some recent and well informed travellers estimate the number in Poland alone at 2,000,000. The following return was made to Bonaparte of the number of Jews in different parts of the globe:

Jidda, s-p. Arabia, on the Red sea, in the sherriffate of Mecca, and is the port of that city; 40 W. Mecca. Lon. 39. 15. E. Lat. 21. 32. N. Pop. about 5,000. In 1540 it was surrounded with walls, which are now decayed. It is situated in a barren sandy district, destitute of water, and is supported partly by a trade with Egypt and India, and partly by the concourse of pilgrims. The town makes a good appearance, in consequence of a rising ground behind. It is superior to Mocha. The houses are built of large blocks of madreporé; the streets very narrow. The entrance of the road is full of shoals. The English are the only European nation who carry on a trade here, which was formerly considerable; now declined. The chief export is coffee.

Jihon, or Gihon, or Sihon, or Amol, or Amu, (an. Oxus,) r. Central Asia, which rises from mountains between Great Bukharia and Chinese Tartary, a considerable distance northeast of Badakshan, and after a winding course, generally WNW., of more than 1200 miles, flows into the lake of Aral. The cities of Samarcand, Bukhara, Termed, Balk, and Gaur, are on its branches. It has been generally believed that it formerly flowed into the Caspian sea, and that its course was turned into its present channel by the Tartars, according to some before the 16th century, but according to others, about 1719. This opinion is rejected by Malte-Brun, and other geographers, who maintain that the Jihon always flowed into the lake of Aral; and that the rejected opinion was formed and propagated by persons whose knowledge was imperfect, particularly with regard to the form of the Caspian sea, or the existence of the lake of Aral.

Joannina, or Janna, or Janina, city, Eu. Turkey, capital of Albania, and of a Turkish pachalic of the same name, on W. bank of a lake; 65 W. Larissa, 370 W. by S. Constantinople. Lon. 21. 38. E. Lat. 39. 30. N. Pop. 35, or 40,000. H. 5,000. Greek abp. see. It has 2 forts, 2 palaces, 8 Greek chh., and 17 mosques. The situation and environs are extremely beautiful; on one side is a fertile and extensive plain, 12 or 14 miles long, covered with groves, gardens, and plantations; on the other, the lake with its woody islands, stretches out for a distance of several miles, and the view is terminated by the lofty mountains of Thessaly. The houses and minarets of the town appear to rise amid groves of orange, lemon, and cypress trees. The town is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, and 1 broad. The two principal streets run across each other at right angles, and run nearly through the town, and are tolerably paved. Of the dwelling houses, some are spacious and well built, but the windows are small, and the ground floor is used for stables and warehouses, and they have generally a gloomy appearance from the streets.

Joannina contains 2 academies, one for boys, the other called a gymnasium, for youths more advanced. The language spoken here is the modern Greek, and the inhabitants are represented as more polished and better educated than in almost any other Greek town. The inhabitants consist of Greeks and Albanians, with some Turks and Jews.—Joannina was founded in the 15th century, and since the beginning of the 19th, has become famous as the capital of the late celebrated Ali Pacha, a chief who exercised almost unlimited power, and brought under his dominion not only Albania and ancient Epirus, but also a considerable part of Thessaly. He had a revenue of about £500,000, a regular force of 10,000, with a militia of about 40,000.

Joanna or Hinzuan, one of the Comoro islands, about 30 miles long, and 15 broad. Lon. 44. 48. E. Lat. 12. 14. S. Pop. according to Groce, 130,000; according to Williamson, in 1810, 90, or 100,000; but later and more probable calculations reduce it to 6, or 7,000. The sea coasts of this island are chiefly in the hands of Arabians, who have obtained a settlement, and driven the original natives to the interior and mountainous parts, though the latter are double the number of the former. Though not the largest, it is the principal, and demands tribute of the other islands. The climate is delightful. There are 73 villages in this island, besides the town of Joanna, or Machadou, where the king resides. The town of Joanna contains about 200 houses, the greatest part of which are inhabited by the principal personages of the country; they are built of stone, but are very low, except the king's palace, which is high and spacious.

Juan du Fuca, (Straits of;) inlet on NW. coast of N. America, from the Pacific ocean into the gulf of Georgia, having Quadra and Vancouver's island on the north, and Cape Flattery on the south. Lon. of the entrance 124. W. Lat. 48. 25. N. The strait is from eight to 14 miles wide, has bold shores on both sides, and is of safe and easy navigation at all seasons. The country on both sides is elevated, and in some places mountainous, mostly covered with timber, much of which is suitable for ship building. There are intervals of clear land of a fertile soil and luxuriant vegetation. This strait is said to have been first discovered, in 1592, by Juan de Fuca, a Greek pilot of Cephalonia, in the service of the viceroy of Mexico. It was entered by capt. Vancouver, in 1792, who thus speaks of the country ; "the serenity of the climate, the innumerable pleasing landscapes, and the abundant fertility that unassisted nature puts forth, require only to be enriched by the industry of man, with villages, mansions, cottages, and other buildings, to render it the most lovely country that can be imagined ; whilst the labour of the inhabitants would be amply rewarded in the bounties which nature seems ready to bestow on cultivation."—Port Discovery lies on the south side of the strait, and Port St. Juan on the north.

Juggernaut, Juggunnatha, Jagarnautporurum, (Jagatnatha, i. e. the Lord of the World;) celebrated place of Hindoo worship, Hind., on the sea coast of Orissa, district of Cattack ; 42 S. Cattack, 310 SW. Calcutta, 710 NNE. Madras, 1,050 E. Bombay. The pagoda stands close to the sea shore, a few miles NE. Chilka lake, and adjacent to the town of Persotem. The surrounding country is extremely barren. The pagoda is a shapeless mass, no way remarkable, except as an object of Hindoo veneration. Dr. Carey is of opinion, that as many as 1,200,000 persons visit the place every year, of whom an incredible proportion, (some say 9 of 10,) die on their way from want, fatigue, or disease. For 50 miles distant the approach to the spot is known by the quantity of human bones strewed in the way. The characteristics of the idol's worship are obscenity and blood.

Jura, dep. France, bounded north by Upper-Saône, E. by Doubs and the canton of Berne in Switzerland, S. by Aine, and W. by Saône-and-Loire and Côte-d'Or. It is divided into 4 arrondissements, Lons le Saunier, the capital, Dole, Poligny, & St. Claude. Sq. m. 2,050. Pop. 292,882.

Jura, isl. in the North sea, near W. coast of Scotland. It extends fully 30 miles in length, and is, on an average, 7 broad. It is the most rugged of the Western Isles, being composed chiefly of huge rocks, piled one on another in the utmost disorder, naked, and incapable of cultivation. The chief of these mountains extend in the form of a ridge, from S. to N., nearly in the middle of the island. They are 4 in number, which are termed the Paps of Jura, and are conspicuous at a great distance. They are called Beinn-a-chaolais, Beinn-an-oir, Beinn-sheunta, and Corra-bhein. Beinn-sheunta is 2,359 feet, and Beinn-an-oir is 2,500 feet above the level of the sea. The climate of Jura is very healthy. The Gaelic is the only language spoken in the island. Lon. 5. 55. W. Lat. 55. 58. N. Pop. 1,157.

Jutland, pr. Denmark, bounded on all sides by the sea, except towards the south, where it is bounded by Sleswick. It is about 180 miles in length, and from 70 to 90 in breadth; and of all the territories belonging to Denmark Proper, it is the largest, and yields the greatest revenue. Sq. m. 9,500. Pop. 440,000. It is divided into four bishoprics, Aalborg, Wiborg, Aarhus, and Ripen. The country is indented by bays and inlets, but has few rivers, and none large. The north coast is an immense range of sand banks, dangerous to navigation. The country is generally low, having no mountains. On the east coast there are extensive forests of oak, fir, birch, &c.; on the west are hardly any species of trees but alder and willow. The kind of grain most cultivated is rye, great quantities of which are exported to Norway. The pastures are extensive and rich; horses and cattle numerous. Iron, marble, and limestone are found; also excellent turf. The most of the inhabitants speak Danish; the gentry German. The religion is Lutheran. Agriculture and education are in rather a backward state.

The peninsula of Jutland, anciently called Cimbrica, or Chersonesus Cimbrica, includes both the province of Jutland and the duchy of Sleswick in the south.

Kamtschatka, or Kamtchatka, large peninsula, Asia, forming a part of the Russian government of Irkutsk, and district of Ochotsk, to which it is joined at the northern extremity. It is bounded E. and S. by the N. Pacific ocean, W. by the sea of Ochotsk and the Penzinskoe gulf. It is upwards of 600 miles long, and from 30 to 300 broad. Lat. 51. to 62. N. A chain of lofty mountains passes through the whole peninsula ; several of them are volcanic, one situated near Niznei Kamtschatskoi, is so high that it is said it may be seen nearly 200 miles, and is liable to frequent eruptions. The climate is exceedingly cold, as severe as that of an arctic region ; and is rendered disagreeable by perpetual fogs. There are scarcely 3 months of imperfect summer. The soil is lean and stony, producing scarcely any grain. Animals, producing fur, are abundant, particularly the sable ; also several kinds of foxes ; the beaver, hare, marmot, &c. The most formidable animal is the bear. The coasts and rivers, swarm to a most extraordinary degree, with fish, which is the chief article of food of the inhabitants. There are several species of trees ; as birch, willow, dwarf pines, cedars, &c., generally of small size.

The Kamtschaldales are below the common stature ; have broad shoulders and a large head ; a face, especially the nose, long and flat ; eyes small and sunk ; thin lips, scarcely any beard, and short legs. They are mild and hospitable, but indolent and excessively filthy in their habits. They live chiefly upon fish, and make much use of dogs for the purpose of labour and draught. Like all savage nations coming in contact with civilized, they have suffered greatly by the connexion ; particularly by the introduction of ardent spirits. They were at first estimated at 15,000 ; but by the last census at only 2,843. The Cosacs and Russian soldiers amount to 300. The trade is carried on from Irkutsk by way of Ochotsk. The exports consist only of furs to the amount of from 50, to 100,000 rubles. Kamtschatka is divided into 4 districts, Bolscheretsk, Tiguilok, Niznei Kamtschatskoi, and Verchnei Kamtschatskoi.

Kenawha, or Kenhawa, co. W. side of Va., bounded NW. by the river Ohio, Mason and Wood cos., NE. by Harrison and Randolph cos., SE. by Greenbrier, Giles, and Tazewell cos., SW. and W. by Kentucky; W. 364. Pop. in 1810, 3,866; slaves, 352. Pop. in 1820, 6,399.

Kenawha, or Kenhawa, (Great), r. Va., which has its sources in the western part of N. C., and flows through the western part of Virginia, in a northwesterly direction, and joins the Ohio at Point Pleasant, 87 miles below Marietta, and 265 below Pittsburg. It receives Greenbrier river in the western part of Monroe co., and about 40 m. below the junction, it has a remarkable cataract, falling perpendicularly 50 feet. There are salt works on the river, a little above the town of Charlestown. The river is navigable most of the year.

Kenawha, (Little), r. Va. which runs W. into the Ohio, 178 miles below Pittsburg.

Kenchester, v. Eng., Herefordshire; 6 WNW. Hereford; on the river Ine, which runs into the Wye at Hereford. It is supposed to have been once a celebrated city, called Ariconium, where Offa had a palace. Nothing remains of the splendour of Ariconium but a piece of a temple. All around the city you may easily trace the walls, some stones being left every where, though overgrown by hedges and timber trees. Many coins and antiquities have been found.

Kenchres, or Kenkri, (an. Cenchreæ), small s-p. Eu. Turkey, in the Morea; 7 W. by S. Corinth. It contains a custom house and depot belonging to the bay of Corinth.

Kendal, p-t. Stark co. Ohio; 7 WSW. Canton, W. 480. It is pleasantly situated on a plain on Sippo creek, a fine mill stream, which flows into the Muskingum 2 or 3 miles below the town. It contains several mills, and a large woollen manufactory, about 50 dwelling houses, and is flourishing.

Kendal, or Kirkby in Kendal, t. Eng., in Westmoreland; 22 N. Lancaster, 256 NNW. London. Lon. 2. 49. W. Lat. 54. 21. N. Pop. 7,505. It is situated in a valley surrounded with hills, on the river Ken; celebrated for its manufactures, the principal of which are cottons, coarse woollen, knit worsted stockings, fish-hooks, &c. It has a large weekly market on Saturday; near it are the remains of an ancient castle.

Kenhawa Saline, p-v. Kenawha co. V.; W. 360.

Kenilworth, called by corruption Killingworth, t. Eng., in Warwickshire; 5 N. Warwick, 6 SSW. Coventry, 101 NW. London. Lon. 1. 35. W. Lat. 52. 21. N. Pop. 2,279. It consists chiefly of an irregular street nearly a mile in length, and has considerable manufactures of horn combs, and a market on Wednesday.

The town is chiefly noted for its magnificent castle, which, along with its extensive chase and park, formed at one time the pride and ornament of this part of the kingdom. It was originally founded by Geoffrey de Clinton, chamberlain and treasurer to Henry I. Most of the buildings, of which remains are yet visible, were erected by John of Gaut, father of Henry IV. It continued in the possession of the crown till the time of Elizabeth, who conferred it on Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester. He enlarged and adorned it at the expense of £60,000 sterling, and afterwards entertained the queen here for 17 days, in a style of extraordinary magnificence. The area within the walls of the castle contained 7 acres, and the circuit of the walls, manors, parks, and chase, was 19 or 20 miles. The building was greatly demolished during the civil wars; and the remains of the castle now present one of the most splendid and picturesque wrecks of castellated strength in England, and impart a melancholy grandeur to the town and neighbourhood.

Kennebecasius, r. New Brunswick, which runs into the St. John, Lon. 66. 5. W. Lat. 45. 25. N.

Kennebec, co. Maine, bounded N. by Somerset co., E. by Penobscot and Hancock cos., S. by Lincoln co. and W. by Oxford co. Pop. in 1810, 32,364; in 1820, 42,623. Chief towns, Augusta, Hallowell, Gardiner, and Waterville.

Kennebec, r. Maine, next to Penobscot, the largest in the state. It has two principal branches, the eastern and western. The former rises from Moosehead lake, and the latter, called Dead river, interlocks with the sources of the Chaudiere, with which it is connected by a portage of only 5 miles. The two branches unite about 20 miles below Moosehead lake; and the river afterwards pursues a southerly course, and flows into the Atlantic, between Phippsburg and Georgetown, a league from Seguin island. It is joined by the Androscoggin, 18 miles from the sea. The tide flows up as far as Augusta, and the river is navigable for ships to Bath, 12 miles; for vessels of 150 tons to Hallowell, 40 miles, for sloops to Augusta, 2 miles further; and for boats to Waterville, 18 miles above Augusta.

The most considerable falls on the Kennebec, are Teconic falls, between Waterville and Winslow; Skouhegan falls, between Bloomfield and Canaan; Norridgewock falls, between Anson and Madison; and Karatunk falls, between Emden and Solon. There are 3 bridges across this river, one at Augusta, one connecting Canaan and Bloomfield, and one at Norridgewock.—The country watered by the Kennebec generally consists of excellent land; it is one of the best grazing districts in New England; and there are upon the banks of the river, a number of handsome and flourishing towns; among which are Bath, Gardiner, Hallowell, Augusta, Waterville, Bloomfield, and Norridgewock.

Kennebunk, p-t. & port of entry, York co., Maine, near the mouth of the river of the same name; 10 S. Saco, 18 N. by E. York, 25 SSW. Portland, W. 529. Lon. 70. 32. W. Lat. 43. 23. N. Pop. 2,145. It is situated on Wells bay. The river Mousum flows through the town into the bay, and Kennebunk river flows on the eastern side dividing Kennebunk from Arundel. It contains a bank, an insurance office, 2 houses of public worship, 1 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Baptists; a printing office, a cotton manufactory, and valuable mills. It has considerable trade; the principal article of export is timber. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1816, amounted to 10,625 tons, principally employed in the West India and European trade. The principal harbour is at the mouth of the Kennebunk, which is somewhat obstructed by a sandbar and ledge. In 1820, the sum of $5,000 was granted by Congress, to build a pier at the mouth of the river. Kennebunk was incorporated in 1820; till then it was a parish of Wells.

Kennebunk, r. Maine, which runs into the sea, at Kennebunk, forming a good harbor.

Towns. Frankfort is the seat of government, Lexington and Louisville are the largest towns. The other most considerable towns are Maysville, Washington, Bairdstown, Paris, Danville, Russellville, Georgetown, and Newport.

Education, &c. There is a college at Lexington, and another has been incorporated at Danville. Academies are established at Augusta, Cynthiana, Frankfort, Georgetown, Greensburg, Harrodsburg, Louisville, Newport, Paris, Russellville, Versailles, Washington, &c. The legislature has made an appropriation of lands for the support of public schools, in every county, but these appropriations, in many instances, have been injudiciously managed, and have, in some cases, turned to little account. Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, are the most numerous denominations of Christians in Kentucky.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate, consisting of 38 members, chosen by districts, for 4 years; and a house of representatives, not exceeding 100, chosen annually. The governor and lieutenant governor are chosen by the people for 4 years, but are not eligible for the succeeding 7 years. The legislature meets on the 1st Monday in November.

Rivers. The principal rivers of Kentucky are the Ohio, which flows along the state 637 miles, following its windings; the Mississippi, Tennessee, Cumberland, Kentucky, Green, Licking, Big Sandy, Salt, and Rolling.

Face of the country, soil, &c. Cumberland mountains form the southeast boundary of this state. The eastern counties, bordering on

Virginia, are mountainous and broken. A tract from 5 to 20 miles wide, along the banks of the Ohio, is hilly and broken land, interspersed with many fertile valleys. Between this strip, Green river, and the eastern counties, lies what has been called the garden of the state. This is the most populous part, and is about 150 miles long, and from 50 to 100 wide, comprising the counties of Mason, Fleming, Montgomery, Clarke, Bourbon, Fayette, Scott, Harrison, Franklin, Woodford, Mercer, Jessamine, Madison, Garrard, Logan, Casey, Lincoln, Washington, and Green. It is watered by Kentucky, Licking, Little Sandy, and Salt rivers, and their numerous branches. The soil is excellent, and the surface is agreeably diversified, gently rising and descending. These lands produce black walnut, black cherry, honey locust, buckeye, pawpaw, sugar maple, mulberry, elm, ash, cottonwood, white thorn, with an abundance of grape vines. There is a tract of country in the southwestern part of the state, E. and N. of Cumberland river, and watered by Green and Barren rivers, about 100 miles in extent, called the barrens, which, a few years since, was a beautiful prairie, destitute of timber. It is now covered with a young growth of various kinds of trees. These, however, do not prevent the growth of grass, and an almost endless variety of plants, which are in bloom during the whole of the spring and summer; when the whole region is a wilderness of the most beautiful flowers. The soil is of an excellent quality, being a mixture of clay, loam, and sand. Through this country there runs a chain of conical hills, called knobs. It is also distinguished for some most stupendous caves. This country, sometimes called the Green river country, is now rapidly settling. The principal towns in it are Russellville, Bowling Green, and Hopkinsville.

Curiosities. Ancient fortifications & mounds of earth are found in almost all parts of Kentucky. The caves in the southwestern part of the state are great curiosities. One, styled Mammoth cave, 130 miles from Lexington, on the road leading to Nashville, is said to be 8 or 10 miles in length, with a great number of avenues and windings. Earth strongly impregnated with nitre is found in most of these caves, and there are many establishments for manufacturing it. From 100 lbs. of earth, 50 lbs. of nitre have frequently been obtained. A number of the rivers in this state have excavated the earth, so as to form abrupt precipices, deep glens, and frightful gulfs. The precipices formed by Kentucky river are in many places awfully sublime, presenting perpendicular banks of 300 feet of solid limestone, surmounted with a steep and difficult ascent, four times as high. The banks of Cumberland river are less precipitous, but equally depressed below the surface of the surrounding country.

Productions. Wheat, tobacco, and hemp, are the staple productions. Indian corn is, however, the principal grain raised for home consumption. Rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, flax, potatoes, &c. are cultivated. Apples, pears, peaches, cherries, and plums are the most common fruits. Domestic animals are large and beautiful, and particularly the horse.

Minerals. Marble of excellent quality abounds, and the whole state may be said to repose on a bed of limestone. Salt and iron are among the minerals of this state. The most extensive works for the manufacture of salt, established W. of the Alleghany mountains, are on the waters of Kentucky. These supply not only this state, but a great part of Ohio and Tennessee.

Manufactures. Kentucky, from its position, has become a manufacturing state. The amount of manufactured articles, in 1810, exceeded $10,000,000. Of this sum, the looms produced $2,657,081; salt works, $325,870; rope walks, $393,400; maple sugar, $303,932.

Kiang-nan, pr. China, bounded N. by Chang-tong, E. by the sea, S. by Tche-kiang and Kiang-si, and W. by Honan, and Hou-quang. Here the ancient emperors always kept their court, till they were obliged for reasons of state to remove nearer Tartary, and choose Peking for the place of their residence. It is of vast extent, and contains 14 cities of the first order, and 93 of the second and third order. These cities are very populous, and of the greatest note in the empire, especially for commerce ; it is the rendezvous of all the great barks, for the country is full of lakes, rivers, and canals, either natural or the effect of labour, which communicate with the great river Yang-tse-kiang, that crosses the province. Nan-king is the capital.

Pop. 7,075. It contains three churches, and a protestant university, founded in 1665, with 18 regular and 10 extraordinary professors, and in 1817, only 107 students. It has a library of 60,000 vols., a botanic garden, an anatomical theatre, an observatory, &c. It has a castle delightfully situated, and formerly the residence of the dukes. The environs of the town are very pleasant, and there are fine public walks. The harbour is good, but the trade is limited: exports, corn, butter, cheese, and bacon: manufactures, hats, tobacco, starch, and sugar refining. There is a great annual fair in January, attended by the farmers, and even by the gentry of Sleswick and Holstein, for the arrangement of their pecuniary concerns.—It was formerly one of the Hanse towns.

Kiev, Kievskoe, or Kiow, gov. Russia, bounded N. by Tchernigov, E. by Poltava, S. by Cherson, and W. by Podolia and Volhynia. Sq. m. 20,551. Pop. 1,000,000. It is divided into 12 circles, and contains 77 towns. It comprises a part of the Ukraine; is a continued plain, having little wood, but like the rest of the Ukraine, exceedingly fertile, producing an abundance of corn; also fruits, vegetables, flax, hemp, tobacco, and honey; and abounding in excellent pasturage.

Kiev, or Kiov, or Kiow, city, Russia, capital of a government to which it gives name, on the Dnieper; 420 E. Cracow, 565 S. Petersburg. Lon. 30. 28. E. Lat. 50. 27. N. Pop. 18, or 20,000. Greek abp. see. It stands on a rising ground, on the right bank of the Dnieper, and consists properly of 3 towns, viz. the Old Town, Padol, or the Lower Town, and the fortress of Petschersky. These 3 parts are connected by entrenchments; but the last only is regularly fortified. It stands on an eminence, facing the S.; and besides barracks for the garrison, magazines, officers' houses, and some churches, includes that rich and stately monastery, which was founded in the 11th century, and called Petshersky, because the monks formerly lived in a Petshera, i. e. a cavern on the mountain where the convent now stands. In its subterraneous vaults, which resemble a labyrinth, and consist of cells, chapels, &c. are found great numbers of undecayed bodies, supposed to be the remains of saints and martyrs. The old city of Kiev stands on an eminence facing the N., and is fortified according to the mountainous nature of the country, with hork-works, &c. Here stands the cathedral. Podol lies below Old Kiev in the plain, on the banks of the Dnieper, and excepting the university, churches, and convents, entirely consists of shops and tradesmen's houses. The 3 divisions, along with the suburbs, cover a large tract of ground. The town is gloomy and inanimate, possessing no manufactures; agriculture and distilling of spiritous liquors, are the principal employments of the town and neighbourhood. It has a gymnasium and a theological seminary, and had formerly an academy numerously attended, which was erected in 1803 into a university.—Kiev was founded in A. D. 430, and was a long time the capital of the kingdom of Russia. In 1240, it fell into the hands of the Tartars; afterwards into those of the Lithuanians and Poles; but was restored to Russia in 1686.

It is a pleasant town, and contains many handsome houses and an excellent public school for Catholic children, and is the residence of a Catholic bishop. The town is much visited by strangers, on account of the lake, which is near Magilcuddy's rocks. The lake is sometimes called Lough Lane, and is divided into 3 parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper lakes. The lower is 6 miles long, and 3 broad. The eastern side is diversified with the most beautiful scenery; the south side is composed of immense mountains. On a small island in this lake are the remains of a monastery, the chapel of which is converted into a banqueting room.

Kingston, s-p. & city, Jamaica, on S. coast of the island ; 10 E. Spanish Town. Lon. 76. 33. W. Lat. 18. 1. N. Pop. in 1818, 33,000 ; whites, 10,000 ; people of colour, 2,500 ; free negroes, 2,500 ; slaves, 18,000. It is the largest town in Jamaica ; founded in 1693, after the destruction of Port Royal by an earthquake ; situated on N. side of a beautiful bay, capable of holding 1,000 large ships. It is a place of great wealth and commerce ; there are scarcely ever less than 200 vessels lying in the harbour. It contains 2 chh., 1 Episcopalian, and 1 Presbyterian ; a theatre, a free school, a poor house, and a public hospital. The streets are wide, and cross each other at right angles, and many of the houses are magnificent. It is built on a plain, which rises with a gentle ascent to the Liguanea mountains, six miles distant ; and it enjoys the full benefit of the sea breezes ; but it suffers an inconvenience from the torrents of rain from the mountains in the wet season. The thermometer ranges between 76° and 96°.

King-tcheou, city, China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang, on the Yang-tse river ; 620 SW. Peking. Lon. 111. 37. E. Lat. 30. 28. N. The district of this city is considerable ; it contains 13 towns, 2 of the second order, and 11 of the 3d ; it makes a good appearance, while the lakes which are round it contribute to render the land fruitful and pleasant. It has a great trade, is well built, and populous.

King-tcheou, t. Chinese Tartary ; 235 ENE. Peking. Lon. 120. 14. E. Lat. 41. 6. N.

King-te-tching, t. China, in King-si ; 655 S. Peking. Lon. 116. 56. E. Lat. 29. 25. N. This town, where the manufacturers of the best china-ware live, is as populous as the greatest cities of China, and wants nothing but walls to make it a city. Those places are called tching, that are of great resort and commerce, but not walled. They compute in this town more than 1,000,000 of souls. They consume here every day more than 10,000 loads of rice, and above 1,000 hogs, without mentioning other animals which they feed upon. The lodgings of the great merchants take up a vast space, and contain a prodigious number of workmen. King-te-tching is a league and a half long, standing on the side of a fine river ; the streets are very long, and cut and cross one another at certain distances. It is said to contain 500 furnaces, all employed in making porcelain.

Kin-hoa, city, China, of the first rank, in Tche-kiang ; 682 SSE. Peking. Lon. 119. 16. E. Lat. 29. 16. N. This city is placed in the heart of a province, and on the banks of a fine river, into which several little ones discharge themselves. It was formerly of great extent, and famous for the beauty of its buildings, but the people, who are of a warlike disposition, having long resisted all the power of the Tartars, who invaded China, were at length subdued, and one part of the city burnt. It is now rebuilt. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in large dried plumbs and hams, which are much esteemed, and sent into all the provinces of the empire.

Kinsale, t. Ireland, in Cork; 12. S. Cork. Lon. 8. 30. W. Lat. 51. 43. N. Pop. 10,000. It is situated at the mouth of the river Bandon, which forms a fine harbour, called the Harbour of Kinsale, and is navigable for large sloops, near 12 miles above the town, though a bar prevents large men of war coming into the basin. Kinsale is built under Compass hill, and extends about an English mile. The situation is very singular, the chief street running round the hill, with others above it, communicating by steep lanes. On the opposite shore there are two well-built villages, Cove, and Scilly. In the town and liberties are 6 parishes. In the bathing season it is a place of great resort for fashionable company. The harbour is very commodious, and perfectly secure; but at present, it does not derive great advantage from its harbour, as its foreign commerce, and even its articles of import, are received through the city of Cork, which in return receives its supplies most largely in fish. For carrying on its fisheries, it employs 300 or 400 boats of about 20 tons burden. Kinsale sends one member to parliament.

Kiressoun, see Keresoun.

Kirghises, or Kirguis, or Kirgeese, or Kirguses, a numerous and widely extended people of Independent Tartary, occupying a great part of the southern frontier of Asiatic Russia. Their origin is uncertain. They are divided into 3 hordes, called the Little, Middle, and Great hordes. The Little horde occupy the western position, and wander over the plains S. and E. of the Ural, and between the Caspian and Aral. The Middle horde live farther east, on the vast plains north of lake Aral. These two hordes, subsist entirely on their flocks, and have no agriculture. The Great horde live farther to the E. and S., beyond the Aral, and on the Sirr. These last people have few relations with the Russian empire ; and though some are pastoral, yet a considerable proportion cultivate the land, and inhabit fertile, mild, and well watered countries. In the lofty ranges between Kashgar and Siberia, there is a race, called Wild or Mountain Kerghises ; free, fierce, and warlike ; amounting to about 50,000. There is another detachment south of Cashgar, an agricultural people, and more civilized than the rest.

The Little and Middle hordes are said to consist each of about 30,000 tents or families ; each of about 10 persons ; total about 600,000. Their constitution is entirely free and independent. The khan of the Little horde is indeed appointed by Russia, but he has scarcely any influence. The Russian government, instead of exacting any tribute, pay regular pensions to all the principal chiefs, in consideration that these turbulent warriors shall not exercise upon the Russian empire those predatory habits, for which they have always been famous. The Kirghises profess the Mahometan religion; practise polygamy; and live in tents of felt, superior to those of the Calmucs. Their articles of trade are cattle, furs, leather, and coverlets of felt.

Kom, or Com, or Koom, (an. Choana,) t. Persia, in Irak; 150 N. Ispahan. Lon. 51. 14. E. Lat. 34. 20. N. Pop. about 15,000. It is said to have contained formerly 15,000 houses, but is now much reduced, and exhibits extensive ruins. It is esteemed by the Persians a holy city, and has a celebrated mosque, and an asylum for debtors, who are protected and supported. One of the mosques is highly esteemed by the Persians, because of the sepulchres of Shah Sophy, and his son Shah Abbas II. and that of Sidy Fatima, grand daughter of Mahomet. These tombs are frequented by pilgrims from all parts of Persia, who resort hither once a year to pay their devotions. Kom is celebrated for manufacturing the best sabres and poniards of all Persia. The walls of the town are lofty, and it has seven gates. The grand bazar crosses the town from one gate to the other; besides which, there are others well furnished with coffee houses, and shops of various kinds. The country round about is fertile in rice and fruit.

Denmark, at the entrance into the Baltic from the Greater Belt, about 60 miles in length, and 12 in its mean breadth, and reckoned the most fertile spot in the Danish dominions. This island produces plenty of all sorts of grain, particularly very fine wheat, and excellent pease. It is also famous for a kind of red fruit, called manna. The country lies low, the soil is damp, and the air is very unhealthy. Of all the inhabitants of this island the clergy are the best provided for, according to their rank. The nobility are numerous here, and many of them have very fine seats, and considerable estates. Naskow is the capital. Pop. 38,000. Sq. m. 459. Laaland united with Falster, forms a bishopric. Labour, before the revolution, a district of France, in Gascony, of which Bayonne was the capital.

Labrador, country, N. A., forming a part of New Britain, belonging to Great Britain, and attached to the government of Canada ; bounded NE. by Hudson's straits and the N. Atlantic ocean, SE. by the straits of Belisle, S. by Canada, and W. by Hudson's bay. Mr. Cartwright, who, from a long residence of 16 years, had good opportunities of being well informed, says the face of the whole country, at least all that we are at present acquainted with, is very hilly, and in most parts mountainous. The S. coast appears fertile from the sea, but a close inspection discovers the soil to be poor, and the verdure to consist only of coarse plants adapted to the nourishment of deer and goats, but not proper for horses, kine, or sheep. The native inhabitants are two distinct nations of Indians, Mountaineers and Esquimaux. The climate is remarkably healthy, the winters are very long and severe, but the cold is of a pleasant kind, never causing a person to shiver, as it does in England. It produces but 7 kinds of trees, black, white, and red spruce, larch, silver fir, birch, and aspen, besides shrubs; the beasts are bears, both white and black, reindeer, wolves, wolverines, various kinds of foxes, martens, lynxes, otters, minks, beavers, &c.; the birds are white-tailed eagles, falcons, hawks, grouse, geese, ducks, plover, &c. The exports are cod-fish, salmon, oil, whalebone, and furs. There are several Moravian settlements on the E. coast, the principal of which is Nain. In these settlements, there are about 600 inhabitants, who have been taught to read the scriptures in their own language. Lon. 55. 30. to 78. 30. W. Lat. 50. 30. to 62. 30. N.

Laccadive Islands, group of small islands in the Indian sea; the nearest is about 120 miles from the coast of Malabar. Lon. 71. 15. to 73. 30. E. Lat. 10. to 12. 40. N. These islands are supposed to be what Ptolemy called Insulae Numero XIX., but in fact they are 32; all of them small, and covered with trees; they are rocky on their sides, mostly as if laid on a bottom of sand, attended with reefs, and the channels between them very deep. They are commonly visited by English ships, in their way from India to the Persian gulf, or Red sea. The principal traffic of these islands is in the produce of the cocoa palm, such as the oil, the cables, and cordage; and in fish, which is dried and sent to the continent of India, from whence they get rice, &c. in return. They also trade to Mascat, in large boats, and bring back, in return for their commodities, dates, and coffee. Ambergris is often found floating off these islands. The inhabitants are mostly Mahometans, called Moplays.

Ladrones, or Mariana Islands, cluster of islands in the North Pacific ocean, discovered by Magellan ; by some said to be 14, others 16, which occupy a space of 450 miles in extent. Lon. 145. to 148. E. Lat. 13. to 21. N. Their names are Guam, or St. John, the largest, Zarpán or Rota, Aguignan or St. Ann, Tinian, Saypan or St. Joseph, Anatachan or St. Joachim, Sarigan or St. Charles, Guguan or St. Philip, Amalagan or Conception, Pagon or St. Ignatius, Agrigan or St. Xavier, Assonsong, or Assumption, and Urac, a desert isle. Magellan is said to have first called them Las Islas de las Velas, i. e. The Island of Sails ; or de las Velas Latinas, i. e. of Triangular Sails, from the appearance of their prows ; but afterwards Las Islas de las Ladrones, or The Islands of Thieves ; because the Indians stole every thing that was made of iron within their reach. The latter end of the 17th century, they obtained the name of the Mariana, or Marienne Islande, from the queen of Spain, Mary Ann of Austria, the mother of Charles II., at whose expense missionaries were sent over thither to propagate the Christian faith. In almost all books of history and voyages, as well as in maps, we find them styled the Ladrones ; notwithstanding which the last mentioned name has gradually gained ground. These islands lie in the torrid zone, and yet so much is the heat of the sun tempered by the air, and by breezes of the sea, that the climate is, generally serene, salubrious, and pleasant ; only in some seasons of the year they are liable to hurricanes, which, though they do sometimes a great deal of mischief, yet clear and refresh the air, in such a manner, that before they were visited by the Europeans, the people commonly lived to a great age. The inhabitants are tall, robust, active, and ingenious ; they wear little clothing ; both sexes stain their teeth black, and paint their bodies red ; their religion is an ignorant superstition.—That most extraordinary and useful plant, the bread-fruit-tree, was first discovered here.

Lahore, or Punjab, country in NW. part of Hindoostan, bounded N. by Cashmere, E. by the mountains of Thibet, SE. by Delhi, S. by Agimere and Moutan, and W. by the Indus, which separates it from Cabulistan ; about 320 miles long, and 220 broad. Sq. m. about 70,000. Pop. estimated at about 4,000,000. The country possesses many advantages, is watered by noble rivers, has a very fruitful soil, producing rice, corn, fruit, tobacco, cotton, sugar, &c. ; but owing to various revolutions, and to its being possessed by petty Seik and other chiefs, is one of the least populous and worst cultivated parts of India. The rivers are the Indus, Setledge, Behut or Chulum, Chunaub, Beyay, and Bauvee. The chief towns, Lahore and Amretsir. The inhabitants are mostly Seiks, also Jauts and other Hindoos, and Mahometans. This country is often called Punjab, which signifies five waters, or five rivers.

Lahore, city, Hind., capital of Lahore or Punjab, on the Rauvee ; 280 NW. Delhi, 420 E. Candahar. Lon. 73. 48. E. Lat. 31. 50. N. Pop. estimated at 150,000. It has been the capital of Hindoostan and the residence of Moguls, and though greatly reduced and decayed, is now the capital of the Seiks. In 1609 it was visited by Mr. Finch, who describes it as a magnificent city, nearly 10 miles in length, surrounded by a fortification having 12 gates. The walls and ceilings of the palace were covered with gold and silver ; and the royal garden called Shah al Imaret, superior to any thing of the kind in Europe. Of all this grandeur little now remains, except some handsome tombs, particularly of Jehangire, Noor Jehan, and Khuaje Ayass. The city is daily falling to decay, and the rich inhabitants are emigrating to Amretsir ; yet it contains manufactories of all kinds of warlike instruments, and is a place of considerable size, and has a good bazar. The walls are lofty, but are decaying.

Lapland, the most northern country in Europe, bounded N. by the Artic ocean, E. by the White sea, S. by Sweden, and W. by Norway and the Atlantic. Lat. 64. to 71. N. Length from Cape Orlov on the White sea, to Sälterfjord, on the Atlantic, about 700 miles, breadth from N. to S. 500. Sq. m. computed at 150,000. Pop. estimated at 60,000. It is divided into 3 parts, called Russian, Swedish, and Danish Lapland, according to the countries to which it is, or has been subject.

Russian Lapland, the most dreary of the whole, is included in the government of Archangel, and called the circle of Kola.—Swedish Lapland, or Lapland Proper, is now included in the government of Umea, and is divided into 6 districts, or lapmarks; containing about 53,000 sq. m., and 13,000 inh.—Norwegian Lapland, or Finnmark, now belongs to Sweden. It is the most northerly part, containing about 27,000 sq. m., and about 27,000 inhabitants.

The country is mostly rough and mountainous; but in some parts there are extensive morasses; the climate cold, and the soil generally sterile. The principal rivers are the Tornea, Alter, and Tana; the lakes are numerous; the largest is lake Enara. The inhabitants are of low stature, swarthy complexion, professing Christianity, but little advanced in civilization, subsisting chiefly on animal food, their chief wealth consisting in herds of rein-deer; and though their lot is full of toil and penury, are much attached to their country.

Lassa, city, Asia, capital of Thibet; 500 N. by E. Calcutta. Lon. 91. 20. E. Lat. 29. 30. N. Pop. in 1715, about 30,000. It is situated on a branch of the Burrampooter, in a plain, not encompassed by walls, but surrounded on all sides by mountains. The city is of small extent but surrounded by Tartar residences in the form of fauxbourgs. It is celebrated chiefly as the residence of the Grand Lama, the great head of the Shaman religion, which is widely diffused over a great part of Asia. Here is a temple, the most famous in the country, situated on a mountain to the east of the city, called Putala, or Holy Mountain. It is resorted to from all quarters. The lama is held in nearly the same veneration, throughout almost all the immense regions of Thibet and Tartary, as the pope in the most superstitious of Catholic countries; and the city is in consequence usually thronged with royal and noble devotees from various parts of Asia. It is also much resorted to for purposes of commerce. The palaces or most considerable houses are built of stone; those of individuals of the better sort, of brick baked in the sun; and those of the poor are of earth or clay. The country around Lassa is dry and barren, and almost all the necessaries and luxuries of life are brought from a distance.

It is large and well built; the streets are wide and straight, and the houses built of stone, but of only one story, on account of frequent earthquakes. This town was destroyed by an earthquake, in 1698, and a great number of the inhabitants were buried in its ruins.

Latakia, (an. Laodicea), s-p. Syria; 50 S. Antioch. 70 SW. Aleppo. Lon. 35. 44. E. Lat. 35. 32. N. Pop. in 1810, about 10,000; since reduced to 4,000. Greek bp. see. It is situated at the base and on the south side of a small peninsula, which projects half a league into the sea. Its port, like all the others on this coast, is a sort of basin, environed by a mole, the entrance of which is very narrow. It might contain 25 or 30 vessels, but the Turks have suffered it to be so choaked up, as scarcely to admit four. Ships of above 400 tons cannot ride there, and hardly a year passes, that one is not stranded in the entrance; notwithstanding this, Latakia carries on a great commerce, consisting chiefly of tobacco, of which upwards of twenty cargoes are annually sent to Damietta; the returns from thence are rice, which is bartered in Upper Syria for oil and cottons.

It is delightfully situated on 3 eminences, 1,575 feet above the level of the sea, and between 400 and 500 above the lake. From the uneven surface, the streets are steep and irregular, and the houses not well built. It contains a cathedral, 3 other chh., an arsenal, a hospital, several libraries, and an academy established in 1537, having 9 classes, and 12 professors. The chief branches of education are the classics and divinity. The principal manufactures are jewellery and silversmiths' work. The trade is not considerable; many of the inhabitants are employed in the cultivation of vineyards and gardens; the neighbouring country being very fertile. The air is very pure and healthy, and the town is celebrated for the beautiful and picturesque views presented by the lake and the surrounding mountains. It is celebrated for the resort of strangers, who are attracted hither by its fine situation, its institutions, and the polished character of its society.

Pop. in 1801, 30,669 ; in 1811, 35,950, and including the parish, 62,534. H. 11,300. It is situated on the Aire, which is navigable from the Humber, up to the town, whence the Leeds and Liverpool canal proceeds on the other hand to the west. Placed in the middle of the line of inland navigation, which extends across the island, having a water communication with Liverpool on the one hand, and Hull on the other, its situation is peculiarly favourable for trade and manufactures. The Aire supplies it amply with water, and the neighbouring mines with coal. It is one of the greatest manufacturing towns in England, and the principal seat of the woollen trade.

The town stands on the slope, and partly also on the summit of a hill, extending $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in length, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile in breadth. The houses, are mostly of brick, in general well built, and in the modern part, elegant ; in the other parts, the streets are narrow, crooked, and in some places dirty. It has 5 churches, and 12 houses of public worship, belonging to various classes of dissenters ; various charitable institutions ; but the cloth halls are the most remarkable buildings in Leeds. One of them is 382 feet long, and 198 broad ; the other 270 feet by 210. It is here that all the sales of the woollen cloth manufactured in the town and neighbourhood take place, and it forms the greatest mart for these goods in the kingdom. The business is transacted with the greatest regularity and despatch. Though woollen cloth is the staple manufacture, various other manufactures are carried on, some to a considerable extent.

It contained, in 1807, according to Trutter and Somerville, about 2,500 houses, and 10,000 or 15,000 inhabitants. The houses are disposed without regularity; each, built in a circular form and surrounded with a palisade, contains several apartments for the different branches of the family, who live separately. The houses are thatched with reeds. This town was visited, in 1813, by Mr. Campbell. It had been moved about 60 miles from its former situation, and was smaller than before, containing only 1,500 houses, and 7, or 8,000 inhabitants.

Leghorn, or Livorno, (an. Liburnum, Liburni Portus, & Herculis Labronis Portus,) city & s-p. Tuscany, in the province of Pisa; 15 SW. Pisa, 47 WSW. Florence, 140 NNW Rome. Lon. 10. 17. E. Lat. 43. 33. N. Pop. 50,582. H. 8,000. Jews 8, or 10,000. The population has varied in the present age according to the state of trade, but in 1819, was about 50,000. It is situated in a marshy district, is of a square form, about 2½ miles in circuit; fortified towards the sea, but towards the land merely enclosed by a stone rampart. The streets are straight, wide, well paved, & clean, especially the one that traverses the town in a direct line from the gate of Pisa to that of the harbour, opening near the centre into a spacious square called the Place of Arms. The private houses in general are tolerably well built, but there are few public buildings of interest. The city contains 7 Catholic churches, 2 Greek, 1 Armenian, an elegant synagogue, a Turkish mosque, 3 hospitals, a public library, and an academy of sciences, literature, and the arts. Among the remarkable structures are the arsenal, the warehouses for salt, tobacco, and oil, the theatre, and the public baths.

Leghorn is accounted the greatest commercial depot in Italy. It is the residence of consuls from the different states in Europe, and is visited annually by upwards of 4,000 vessels. It supplies the interior of Italy with the produce of the rest of Europe, the Levant, and the colonies; in return, it exports the produce and manufactures of the adjacent part of Italy. The harbour is divided into inner and outer. The inner is only a small basin, containing 4 or 5 gallies. The outer harbour, which is the real port, is formed by a mole, 600 paces in length. This mole is well paved, with a partition in the middle for sheltering the shipping from the wind, and is a favourite promenade. The harbour is difficult to enter, and large ships lie beyond the mole, securely moored to pillars with large iron rings, there not being sufficient depth of water within. On one side of the port is the Lazaretto, said to be the finest establishment of the kind in Europe. The lighthouse stands on a single rock in the sea, and is brilliantly illuminated by 30 lamps, burning in one lantern.—The principal manufactures in this city, are the working of coral and alabaster.

Here is a respectable and flourishing academy, which was incorporated in 1784, and had, in 1821, a principal, two assistants, and 88 students, 31 studying Greek and Latin. The building is a spacious and elegant edifice, 3 stories high, and has an elevated and pleasant situation. The town contains 3 meeting houses, 1 for Congregationalists, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Friends.

Leicester, p-t. Livingston co. N. Y., on W. side of the Genesee, opposite to Geneseo and Mount Morris; 22 SE. Batavia, 33 S. by W. Rochester, 249 W. Albany. Pop. in 1810, 927; in 1820, 1,331. In this township is the village of Moscow. See Moscow. The flats on the Genesee lying partly in this township, extend 5 or 6 miles in length, and 2 or 3 in width. They are overflowed in the spring, are destitute of timber, and are very fertile, producing great crops of grain. Above the flats, the banks on both sides of the Genesee, rise to the height of 150 or 200 feet, almost perpendicular, and are regarded as a curiosity.—There are two reservations for the Indians, containing about 1,300 acres; one in the north, and the other in the southeast part of the township. On the southeast tract are about 150 Indians; on the north, only two families.

Leicester, (an. Rage & Catæ,) t. Eng., capital of Leicestershire, on the Soar; 27 NNE. Coventry, 98 NNW. London. Lon. 1. 9. W. Lat. 52. 38. N. Pop. in 1801, 16,953; in 1811, 23,146; H. 4,682. Families, 4,873, of which 4,090 were engaged in manufactures. It is a town of great antiquity, situated in the finest wool district in England, and is distinguished for the extent of its stocking manufactures, in which it surpasses every other town in England, except Nottingham. It contains 5 parish chh., houses of public worship for Baptists, Independents, Methodists, and Catholics; an exchange, an infirmary, a free grammar school, and other institutions. It is well built, and from the rapid increase of the town the houses have a modern appearance.

Here was formerly a castle of great extent, of which little now remains. To the southeast of the town is the New Walk, an agreeable promenade, which affords many striking views.—Between 7,000 and 8,000 persons are employed in the various branches of the hosiery business, and in prosperous times about 5,000 dozen stockings are manufactured per week. Water communications have been opened to the north, south, and east. It sends two members to parliament. Market on Saturday. It has a number of fairs.

Leippe, t. Silesia, Neisse; 2 NE. Grotkau.

Leipsic, circle, Saxony; bounded W. and N. by Prussian Saxony, E. by the circle of Meissen, and S. by the circle of Erzgebirg and the principality of Altenburg. Pop. 216,917. Sq. miles 1,537. The soil is fertile, particularly in corn, but deficient in wood, which is brought from Erzgebirg and the Vogtland.

Leipsic, or Leipzig, city, Saxony, capital of the circle of the same name, on the Pleisse; 60 W. by N. Dresden, 90 S. by W. Berlin, 100 ENE. Frankfurt on the Maine. Lon. 12. 22. E. Lat. 51. 20. N. Pop. 32,492. H. 1,369. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile plain, extending a mile in length along the river, and is about $\frac{3}{4}$ m. in breadth. It was formerly fortified, but has long since been dismantled, and the space occupied by the ramparts, laid out in gardens, with a beautiful alley of lime trees. Outside of these are the suburbs, 2 large and 2 small. The only remaining fortification is the castle, called Pleissenburg, adjacent to the river. The streets are neither broad nor well lighted, but they are kept perfectly clean by means of sewers. The private houses, though crowded, have in general a good appearance.

The town is divided into 4 quarters, and has 4 handsome freestone gates, 8 Lutheran chh., 1 Reformed, 6 hospitals, 5 public libraries, 2 gymnasia, and a Protestant university. Among the public edifices are distinguished the exchange, the town house, the cloth-hall, the church of St. Nicholas, the Catholic chapel, the new theatre, and the arsenal. The university was founded in 1409, and is one of the most eminent in Germany. It consists of 4 faculties, theology, law, medicine, and philosophy, and has 27 regular professors, besides extra professors and private lecturers; a library, a museum of natural history, a clinical institute, and a botanic garden. There are several learned societies at Leipsic, as the belles lettres, the philological, the economical, the Linnean, the Collegium, Philobiblicum, and the academy of fine arts.

Leipsic is the chief commercial city in the interior of Germany, and is also the great mart of German literature. It has 3 great fairs, at new year, Easter, and Michaelmas; which are attended by an immense concourse of people, not only from every considerable town in Germany, but also from foreign countries. The total value of business transacted here in a year, exclusive of the book trade, is estimated at 18,000,000 dollars.—The wholesale booksellers of Germany are chiefly confined to Leipsic, Frankfort on the Maine, Berlin, Nuremberg, Augsburg, and Hamburg. Leipsic, being a central position, is the place where booksellers meet periodically at Easter fair to purchase and exchange. There are 50 or 60 booksellers belonging to the city, and the number attending from other parts, varies from 200 to 300. The number of new publications, great and small, exhibited for sale, is computed at 50,000 distinct works, but as the editions are generally small, the value of the books sold or exchanged is supposed to fall short of 1,000,000 dollars.—Natives, Thomasius, Leibnitz, Fabricius, Teller, Kästner.

In 1519, a theological conference was held here between Martin Luther and Dr. Eck.—Near Leipsic the Swedes gained two great battles over the Imperialists in 1631 and 1642; and in October 1813, a tremendous battle was fought between the French army consisting of 160,000 men under Bonaparte, and the allies 240,000 strong; the French being defeated with the loss of 40, or 50,000 in wounded, killed, and prisoners.

Leith, t. Scot., in the county of Edinburgh; 2 NE. Edinburgh. Lon. 3. 12. W. Lat. 55. 58. N. Pop. 20,363. It was formerly called Inverleith. It is the seaport of Edinburgh, situated on the banks of the Water of Leith, at its confluence with the Frith of Forth, which forms the harbour, and divides the town into 2 districts, called North and South Leith, communicating by 2 draw bridges across the harbour. The old part of the town is irregularly built, the streets narrow, and the houses old fashioned and inconvenient, but the new part is regularly laid out, and the houses elegant. The principal public buildings are 7 houses of public worship, 2 hospitals, a high school, exchange, and custom house. The harbour has only 9 feet of water at neap tides, and 16 at spring tides. Leith carries on an extensive trade with the Baltic, Mediterranean, other parts of Europe, and America, besides a great coasting trade. The Greenland fishery is also carried on to considerable extent; likewise ship building. Here are several extensive rope-walks, 6 or 7 glass houses, sugar refineries, soap-works, breweries, iron works, &c. The town has been greatly enlarged and improved within 20 or 30 years.

It contains a Catholic cathedral, 11 other Catholic churches, 1 Greek church, 1 Armenian church, 1 united Greek church, 1 Lutheran church, and 2 synagogues ; a gymnasium, a university, and other institutions. It is the principal thoroughfare from Odessa and other Russian seaports on the Black sea, to Vienna and the rest of Germany. Its fair, which is held during Lent, is on a very large scale, and the business transacted at it is immense. It is a large, opulent city, and pretty well fortified in the Polish manner, that is, only with timber ; and lies low, on the banks of the river Peltew, which soon after joins the Bug ; being surrounded with hills and mountains, which command the town. It carries on a considerable trade, and has two castles, one within, and another without its walls. The latter stands on a high hill, and the Carmelite monastery, which is fortified, may serve for a citadel to this castle.

It is situated on a river of the same name, about 5 miles from the sea ; very considerable before it was almost destroyed by an earthquake, in 1693. At a small distance from the city was a lake abounding in fish, and about 20 miles in compass. The vapours rising from the marshes, made by the overflowing of the lake, greatly infected the air, which was there deemed very unwholesome ; but to make amends for this, the fields were so fruitful, that according to Pliny, they yielded a hundred fold ; whence the city of Leontini was called by Tully, the grand magazine of Sicily. The wines it produced were thought the most delicious of the whole island, but the inhabitants abused the benefit by their intemperance, which gave rise to the proverb, "The people of Leontini are always at their cups."

Lewis, island, or rather peninsula, among the Western islands of Scotland, forming, with Harris, a large island, near 60 miles in length. Lewis, which is the northern part, is 40 miles in length from NE. to SW. and about 13 in its mean breadth. It is on every part of its coast greatly indented with bays or lochs. The country is in general wild, bleak, barren of wood, and little fitted for cultivation; the hills are covered with heath, which affords shelter for various sorts of game. The lakes and streams abound with salmon, large red trout, and other fish. The only town in Lewis, is Stornaway. The Gaelic prevails among the lower class of people; but in the schools the English language is principally taught. Lon. 6. 35. W. Lat. 58. 8. N. Pop. 13,942.

incorporated here in 1822. This town is famous for being the place where hostilities commenced between Great Britain and America, April 19, 1775. A stone monument, with an inscription, is erected on the ground where the battle was fought.

Lexington, p-t. Greene co. N. Y.; 48 SW. Albany, W. 358. Pop. 1,798. It contains two post villages, Lexington and Lexington Heights.

Lexington, p-t. & cap. Rockbridge co. Va., on N. branch of James river; 35 SSW. Staunton, 38 NNW. Lynchburg, 150 W. Richmond, W. 209. It is a handsome town, finely situated, and contains a court house, a jail, a female academy, a Presbyterian meeting house, a college, and upwards of 100 dwelling houses. Near the town is an arsenal belonging to the state of Virginia, containing 20,000 muskets for the use of the militia in the western part of the state. The surrounding country is fertile and well cultivated.

Washington college, at this place, was originally incorporated as an academy, in 1782, under the name of Liberty Hall academy; and in 1813, it was erected into a college, called Washington college, from Gen. Washington, who presented to the institution 100 shares in the James river canal, amounting to $20,000. This stock for a number of years was unproductive, but since the late war, it has become very valuable, and by an arrangement with the legislature, in 1820, the stockholders are to receive 12 per cent. per annum. There are 2 college buildings of brick, 60 feet by 20, of 2 stories, a steward's house, and a refectory. In addition to these buildings, the trustees contemplate erecting a large college edifice. The college has a philosophical apparatus, and a library of about 2,000 volumes. The board of trustees consists of 20 members. The executive government is entrusted to a president, who is also professor of belles lettres and mathematics, a professor of natural philosophy and astronomy, a professor of languages, and one tutor. The number of students is usually from 40 to 50. There is a grammar school connected with the college.

Lexington, district, central part of S. C. Pop. in 1810, 6,641; slaves 1,911. P. in 1820, 8,083.

Lexington, p-t. & cap. Fayette co. Ken.; 22 ESE. Frankfort, 74 E. Louisville, 85 S. Cincinnati, W. 552. Lon. 85. 8. W. Lat. 38. 16. N. Pop. in 1810, 4,226; in 1820, 5,267. It is situated on Town Fork, a small stream which falls into the south branch of the Elkhorn. It is regularly laid out, and contains a court house, a jail, a hospital, 2 market houses, a theatre, a masonic hall, a museum, a public library of 6,000 vols., a female academy (having in 1822, 5 teachers and 160 pupils, a university, 3 banks, one of which is a branch of the U. S. bank, 6 printing offices, from 4 of which is issued a newspaper, and 9 houses of public worship, 3 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, 3 for Methodists, and 1 for Roman Catholics. Lexington has had a very rapid growth. In 1797, it contained only about 50 houses. It is the largest town in Kentucky, and one of the most wealthy and best built towns in the western states. The houses are mostly of brick, and the streets are paved and have side walks; the principal one is about 80 feet wide. Near the centre of the town is a public square, surrounded with brick buildings.

This town contains various and extensive manufacturing establishments, among which are 4 nail manufactories, 2 copper and tin manufactories, 2 steam paper mills, a number of large rope-walks, cotton and woollen manufactories, distilleries, breweries, &c.—The site on which the town is built is in a gently descending valley, which is one of the most fertile tracts in the U. S. The climate is healthy and delightful, and in the vicinity there is a number of handsome country seats. The surrounding country is greatly admired for its rich and beautiful scenery.

Transylvania university was incorporated with the rank of a university in this town in 1798, and was newly organized in 1818, since which it has been very flourishing. There are 2 college edifices of brick, one of which is calculated to accommodate 100 students. The library contains 6,000 volumes. The legislative government is entrusted to a board of seventeen trustees. The university comprises 3 departments, 1st of law, with one professor; 2d, of medicine, with 5 professors; 3d, of literature and general science, with 4 professors besides the president; 1 of natural philosophy, geography, chronology, and history, 1 of ancient languages, 1 of mathematics, and 1 of natural history and botany; and 2 tutors. Law students in 1822, 46; medical students 138; undergraduates 138; members of the preparatory school 62; total 383. Of the undergraduates 54 were irregular members, who recited with the classes but were not candidates for degrees. Commencement is held on the 2d Wednesday in July, after which there is a vacation till the 1st of October.

Leyden, (an. Lugdunum Batavorum, and Caput Germanorum), city, Neth., S. Holland; 10 NE. Hague, 14 N. Rotterdam, 19 SW. Amsterdam. Lon. 4. 29. E. Lat. 52. 9. N. Pop. in 1807, 30,686; in 1818, 28,601. H. 3,017. It is situated on a small branch of the Rhine, in a district called Rhynland, and is one of the largest and handsomest cities in Holland, and inferior to none in the spaciousness of its streets. It is situated in a level, though pleasant and very fertile tract, encompassed with gardens, meadows, and rich pastures. The canals that traverse the town form, by their various intersections, 30 petty islands, connected together by upwards of 100 small bridges, partly of stone, but mostly of wood. The principal streets are broad, well paved, and kept clean. The houses are mostly of brick, built with the gable ends to the street, and some of them are 5 or 6 stories high. Both the public and private buildings have an air of neatness and elegance.

The stadthouse is a magnificent structure, surmounted by a number of spires, and contains a valuable collection of paintings. The city contains 17 churches, several hospitals, and a university, accounted the first in Holland, and was formerly very celebrated, and said to have been once attended by 2,000 students. It was founded in 1575, and has cherished many eminent scholars. It has a valuable botanic garden, a cabinet of natural history, an anatomical theatre, an observatory, and a library, containing 40,000 printed vols. and 10,000 MSS. It has 21 professors, 4 of theology, 4 of law, 4 of medicine, 4 of philosophy, and 5 of languages. The lectures are given in Latin. The number of students in 1819, was about 300.

The woollen and linen manufactures, formerly the great source of wealth to the city, have now declined; but the manufactures of soap and indigo are still considerable, and the yearly fair is much frequented. The printing of classical books was formerly a great branch of trade, but is now much reduced.—Leyden sustained a tremendous siege against the Spaniards in 1575, during which 6,000 persons died of famine.—Natives, John of Leyden, L. Vossius, and Muschenbroek.

other. The first is very fruitful in grain and fruits; the second is very barren, abounding in nothing but thorns, rocks, and flints; the third, though higher than this, enjoys a perpetual spring, the trees being always green there, and the orchards filled with fruit; in a word, it is so agreeable and fertile, that some have called it a Terrestrial Paradise. The fourth is so high, that it is almost always covered with snow, so as to be uninhabitable by reason of the great cold. The greatest elevation is estimated at 9,520 feet. A few specimens yet remain of those magnificent cedars, for which it was once so celebrated.

Liege, (in German Lüttich,) pr. Neth., bounded N. by Limburg, E. by the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine, S. by Luxemburg and France, and W. by Namur & S. Brabant. Sq. m. 2,183. Pop. 354,050, mostly Catholics. It is divided into four districts, Liege, Huy, Viviers, and Marche. The aspect of the country is that of an undulating plain, except in the south and east, where it is hilly and covered with extensive forests. These parts border on the forest of Ardennes, and partake of its rugged and barren soil. The principal river is the Meuse; smaller ones are the Ourthe, Loose, & Semoys. Most parts of the province are better adapted to pasture than tillage. Cattle are raised in great numbers, and it is here that the well known Limburg cheese is chiefly made. Considerable corn is produced, also a little wine, resembling the middling wines of Burgundy and Champagne. The mineral productions are important, consisting of coal, alum, calamine, some lead and iron: here are also the celebrated mineral waters of Spa. The manufactures are considerable, consisting of woollens, hardware, arms, &c.—Before the French revolution, this country was subject to the bishop of Liege, a member of the German body, but in 1792 it was taken by France, and afterwards formed the chief part of the departments of the Lower Meuse, Ourthe, and Samber-and-Meuse; by the congress of Vienna, it was incorporated into the kingdom of the Netherlands.

Liege, Lüttich, or Luyk, city, Neth., capital of the above province, on the Meuse; 14 SSW. Maestricht, 53 E. by S. Brussels. Lon. 5. 31. E. Lat. 50. 39. N. Pop. in 1816, 45,983. H. 8,000. Bp. see. It is situated in a pleasant valley, surrounded with cultivated hills; in this valley, near the city, the Meuse is joined to the Loose, Ourthe, and Ambleve. It is divided into Upper and Lower Town, and has 10 suburbs. The form of the town is compact, being, exclusive of its suburbs, only one mile long, & $\frac{3}{4}$ m. broad. It contains 245 streets, 12 public squares, 1 cathedral, 7 collegiate and 32 parish churches, 10 hospitals, a public library, and a university established in 1816. The town presents very different appearances in different parts; some quarters have miserable streets, narrow, dirty, and thinly inhabited; others have broad streets, neat squares, quays, and promenades. In general, however, Liege is an ill built town, containing a number of gloomy streets and lanes, entirely destitute of that cleanliness and neatness which characterise most towns of the Netherlands. The loftiness of the houses contributes not a little to their gloom: but the scenery of the environs is such as to counterbalance the gloom of the town, the ascent of most of the hills being covered with vineyards, while the lower grounds contain pleasant hop gardens and cornfields. The inhabitants are actively engaged in trade and manufactures. The manufactures are various, consisting of extensive iron works for cannon, muskets, nails, clock work, &c., cloth, leather, also serge, lace, earthenware, glass, vitriol, and verdigrise.

Leignitz, government, Prussian Silesia, lying north of the governments of Breslau and Reichenbach, and including the former duchies and principalities of Glogau, Sagan, Liegnitz, Karolath, with a part of Jauer, and Upper Lusatia. It is divided into 13 circles, viz. Lowenburg, Buntzlau, Goldberg, Liegnitz, Luben, Glogau, Sprottau, Sagan, Friestadt, Grünberg, Gorlitz, Rothenberg, and Lauban. A great part of the country is level; the soil various, in many parts fertile, but mostly sandy. Rivers, Oder, Bober, Neisse, Queis, Schwartzwasser, and Katzbach. Pop. 505,839. H. 92,500. Sq. m. 4,028.

Liegnitz, or Lignitz, t. Silesia, capital of a government and a circle of the same name, and one of the best towns in Silesia, on the Katzbach; 32 W. Breslau, 105 NE. Prague. Lon. 16. 10. E. Lat. 51. 11. N. Pop. 10,021. H. 720. It contains 2 Catholic churches, 2 Lutheran churches, a Lutheran gymnasium, and 3 hospitals. The old palace of the princes, though within the town, is surrounded with a distinct moat and high wall. The states of the provinces assembled here in a very stately stone edifice. Liegnitz carries on a considerable trade in cloth and madder, and is also one of the most ancient towns in all Silesia.

Lille, or Lisle, city, France, capital of the dep. North ; 18 E. Tournay, 140 NNE. Paris. Lon. 3. 5. E. Lat. 50. 38. N. Pop. 59,724. H. 11,284. Before the revolution it was the capital of French Flanders, situated in a rich and marshy soil, surrounded with walls, and strongly fortified by Monsieur Vauban. The river Deule crosses it, which, though small, is navigable. Few cities of France can vie with it in the straightness and width of its streets, the regularity of its buildings, and its general air of neatness. The houses are generally of brick. It contains 50 churches, 5 hospitals, a society of literature and fine arts, a college of surgery, a public library, a gallery of pictures, a botanic garden, &c. Though distant from the sea its trade is extensive. It is one of the most considerable towns in France for manufactures, which are very various, consisting of cloth, camlets, ratteens, stuffs of silk and woollen, cotton, linen of all qualities and designs, lace, ribbons, carpets, hats, stockings, paper, soap, &c. There around the town above 200 windmills, used chiefly for making oil of rapeseed. The citadel of Lille is considered as one of the best works of Vauban, and except Turin, the strongest in Europe.

Lima, or Charleston, p-t. Livingston co. N. Y. ; 18 W. Canandaigua, 225 W. Albany, W. 374. Pop. 1,963.

Lima, intendancy, Peru, bounded north by Truxillo, E. by Tarma and Guanica Velica, S. by Arequipa, and W. by the Pacific. The principal districts are Chançay, Huarachiri, Lima, Canta, Canete, Ica, Pisco, and Nasca. In this province rain is seldom or never known to fall on the west side of the Cordillera, which runs along its eastern side. On the sea coast it is very hot, but as the land rises towards the interior the air becomes milder. The wealth of the province consists in great part in the produce of the mines of Tarma. The archbishopric of Lima includes 4 bishoprics, Truxillo, Guamanaga, Cusco, and Arequipa.

Lima, city, S. A. capital of Peru, 2 leagues from the coast, 30 from the Cordilleras. Lon.

77. 7. W. Lat. 12. 3. S. Pop. in 1795, 52,627 ; Spaniards 17,215 ; Negroes 8,960 ; Indians 3,219 ; monks and clergy 1,392 ; nuns, 1,585. the remainder Mestizoes, &c. Abp. see. It was founded in 1535, by Pizarro, and called Ciudad de los Reys or City of Kings. It is situated in the spacious and delightful valley of Rimac, on the river Rimac, an Indian word from which the name Lima is derived by a corrupt pronunciation. Its situation is very advantageous, commanding the whole valley. A very elegant stone bridge is built over the river, having at one end a gate which forms the entrance into the city, and leads to the grand square. The form of the city is triangular ; its length 2 miles, and its breadth upwards of 1 mile. It is surrounded with a brick wall, flanked with 34 bastions, and having 7 gates and 3 posterns.

The streets are broad, straight, intersecting each other at right angles, well paved, and furnished with streams of water from the river. The houses, though generally of only one story, are commodious and of handsome appearance. They have flat roofs, and are constructed of wood on account of frequent earthquakes, but in such a manner as to resemble stone buildings ; the strong timber work of the walls being covered on each side with laths, or reeds, plastered with mortar, white-washed within, and painted without in imitation of stone. The most of the principal houses have gardens refreshed with streams of water ; and the environs are ornamented with alleys of lime trees, and clusters of country villas. In the middle of the city is a grand square of great extent and beauty, having in the centre a magnificent fountain ornamented with a bronze statue of Fame, from the trumpet of which, and the mouths of 8 lions surrounding it, the water is ejected. The city abounds with churches, chapels, convents, nunneries, colleges, hospitals, and has a noble university founded in 1576. The churches are partly built of stone, and are decorated in a splendid style, with paintings and ornaments of great value ; the walls hung with velvet or tapestry fringed with gold and silver ; the altars covered with massive silver of various workmanship ; the body of the church is crowded with silver tables, candlesticks and pedestals of the statues of angels ; and the sacred vessels and vestments loaded with gold, diamonds, and precious stones of the most dazzling brilliancy, and of incalculable value. Among the other public buildings are the palaces of the viceroy and archbishop, and the mint.

Luxury in dress and a fondness for splendid retinues, constitute the prevailing passion of the inhabitants ; and the public walks and malls are crowded with carriages. All classes are fond of fine clothing, but the ladies, particularly, carry their extravagance, in this respect, to an extraordinary degree. The women are of middling stature, handsome, genteel, gay, and fond of music. When the duke de la Palata, the viceroy, made his entrance into the city, 3 whole streets were paved with ingots of solid silver, each weighing 200 marks, and being from 12 to 15 inches long ; the whole estimated at $54,000,000. In 1700, there were 400 carriages in the city. Cock-fighting and bull-baiting are the favourite amusements of the populace, and gaming is also very common. Lima is the emporium, as well as the capital of Peru. Callao, its port, is 7 miles S. The climate is very pleasant. The thermometer, at noon, in the winter, never falls below 60°, and in summer seldom rises above 85. It is subject to the calamity of tremendous earthquakes, and in summer to the inconvenience from numerous fleas, bugs, and mosquitoes. The country around is watered by art, and is rendered extremely fertile.

Limerick, (an. Regia,) city, Ireland, capital of a county of the same name; 45 N. Cork, 92 WSW. Dublin. Lon. 8. 32. W. Lat. 52. 39. N. Pop. in 1821, 66,043. H. 8,266. About 5,000 Protestants. It is situated on the river Shannon, 60 miles from its mouth, and is a county of itself. This ancient city of Limerick, called by the Irish Lumreach, is generally considered as the capital of the rich and spacious province of Munster, and has been always regarded as one of the principal marts, and before it was dismantled, was esteemed one of the strongest places in Ireland. It stands partly on an island in the Shannon; and is divided into Upper and Lower Towns, united by a stately bridge.

Limerick formerly ranked as the second, but of late as the third town in Ireland; and the chief place in the county of its own name, and one of the finest and best peopled in the province. In the old part, the streets are narrow and gloomy; but in the new quarter they are spacious and regular, and the houses of brick, large and handsome. It contains a custom-house, a cathedral, a bishop's palace, a public library, a theatre, many charitable establishments, 4 Protestant churches, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Quakers, and 8 for Catholics. It has manufactures of linen, woolen, and paper. Its export trade is considerable, being a depot for large quantities of corn.

Lincoln, (an. Clidum, and Lindum.) city, Eng., capital of Lincolnshire, situated on the Witham; 53 NE. Derby, 133 N. London. Lon. 0. 32. W. Lat. 53. 14. N. Pop. 8,861. Bp. see. It is a very ancient city, and was formerly surrounded with walls, defended with towers, and was one of the chief towns for buying and selling wool. Lincoln formerly contained 52 parish churches, with many religious houses, but in the second year of Edward VI. the number of churches was reduced to 15, now reduced to 11. The cathedral, a Gothic edifice, is one of the largest and most elegant in England; the length from E. to W. (including the walls) is 524 feet. The length of the great transept from N. to S. is 227 feet. The height of the central tower is 300 feet. The bell, called the Tom of Lincoln, is one of the finest great bells in the kingdom, weighing 5 tons; 23 feet in circumference. Before the reformation, this cathedral was undoubtedly the finest and richest in the whole kingdom, and the number and splendour of its tombs almost incredible. The city is full of the ruins of monasteries and religious houses. It is now a straggling town, ill built, and greatly declined from its former splendour. It has however been much improved of late, and has some good modern houses. It consists chiefly of 2 streets, with several smaller ones. It communicates with Boston and the sea by the Witham; its chief exports are oats and wool. Market on Friday. It sends two members to parliament.—Upon the plain, on the north side of Lincoln, was fought the famous battle between the friends of the empress Maud, and King Stephen.—Upon Lincoln-heath were likewise fought several bloody battles, between the forces of Cromwell and the royal army.

Lincolnshire, co. Eng., bounded N. by the river Humber, which divides it from Yorkshire, E. by the German sea, S. by Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Northamptonshire, and W. by Rutlandshire, Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, and Yorkshire; 77 miles in length from N. to S., and 48 from E. to W. It is divided into 30 hundreds, which contain one city, (Lincoln,) 33 towns, and 630 parishes. The number of acres is estimated at 1,893,100; of which Mr. Stone, in his View of the Agriculture of the county, supposes there may be 473,000 acres of inclosed marsh and fen land; 200,000 commons, wastes, and unembanked salt marshes; 268,000 common fields, 25,000 woodland, 927,120 inclosed upland. Lisbon, (New), p-t. & cap. Columbiana co. Ohio, on a branch of the Little Beaver; 35 S. Warren, 34 N. Steubenville, 56 NW. Pittsburg, W. 283. Pop. 746. It is a very flourishing town, and contains a court house, a jail, a bank, a public library, a printing office, and two brick meeting houses. In 1805, it contained only 7 dwelling houses, and in 1817, 130. In the vicinity of the town, there are 4 merchant mills, a paper mill, a furnace, a woollen manufactory, and several other mills.

Lisbon, (an. Olisipa, Olissippa, or Olisipona,) city and capital of Portugal, on the north bank of the Tagus, 10 miles above its mouth; 300 W. by S. Madrid. Lon. 9. 8. W. Lat. 38. 42. N. H. 44,057. Pop. 230, or 240,000; by some estimated at upwards of 300,000. It is the residence of the king and his court; also of a patriarch and archbishop. It is built on 3 hills, and lies along the river in the form of a half-moon, four m. in length, and from 1 mile to $1\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth. It is unfortified, and open on all sides; of the ancient wall, there are but little remains. The only military defence, is a small castle of little importance. It is divided into 3 parts, called Alfama, Bairro Alto, and Melo; and has also 3 suburbs, Junqueira, Alcantara, & Campo Grande; to which may be added Belem, a pleasant town, adjoining Lisbon on the west, separated only by a small river. The appearance of the city at a distance, particularly on crossing the river from the south-east, is extremely beautiful, picturesque, and majestic. The great body of water, the river here being nine miles wide; the number of ships which lie at anchor, and cover it like a forest; the city, extending in the form of an amphitheatre, along successive elevations; the hills in the back ground, covered with villas, churches, and olive plantations, all concur to form a picture which almost rivals the view of Constantinople. But here, as in the Turkish capital, the interior of the city ill corresponds to its external beauty. Some parts of it, particularly those lately built, do not disappoint the impression excited by the appearance at a distance; but the great majority of the streets are narrow, irregular, and ill built.

Lisbon contains 13 squares, great and small, 40 parish churches, 99 chapels, 75 convents or monasteries, and various hospitals. The principal edifices are the patriarchal church, the royal monastery of Belem, the church of St. Roque, the new church in the form of a cross, and the royal hospital, which is on a great scale, and admits 12,000 or 15,000 patients in a year. But of the architectural curiosities, the greatest is the aqueduct, which, though not a half a mile in length, passes in one part through a tunnel, in another across a defile. The principal arch is a Gothic, 107 feet wide, and accounted one of the finest specimens of the kind in Europe. Lisbon has an academy of sciences with an observatory and library, several other academies and colleges, several public libraries, one of which contains 80,000 volumes. The Lisbon Gazette and a literary journal, the only publications of the kind in Portugal, are published here.—No models of architecture are to be found among the private houses or public edifices. Among the houses of the nobility, many are stately and even splendid, but they are built without regard to the rules of taste. A blind superstition, a mean acquiescence under power, and a vindictive disposition, are charged upon the inhabitants. The appearance of the city is dull and melancholy.

The manufactures of Lisbon are mostly on a small scale, but its commerce is extensive, comprising all the colonial and three-fourths of the foreign trade of the kingdom. The exports consist of wine, fruits, salt, &c. The average number of vessels that visit it is about 2,000. The harbour is uncommonly spacious and safe. On the bank of the Tagus is a square called the Praça de Commercio, from its being the residence of a number of merchants, and containing the exchange, the custom house, and the India house. In front are the principal quays, which excel in beauty every thing of the kind in London or Paris.

On the 1st Nov. 1755, a great part of the city was laid in ruins by one of the most fatal earthquakes ever experienced. The city then contained about 150,000 inhabitants. The shock was instantly followed by the fall of every church and convent, almost all the large public buildings, and more than one fourth of the houses. In about 2 hours after the shock, fires broke out in different quarters, and raged with such violence for the space of nearly 3 days, that the city was completely desolated. This happened on a holy-day, when the churches and convents were full of people, very few of whom escaped. The number of lives lost is computed by some at 30,000, by others at 60,000.—Native, Camoens.

The principal village is delightfully situated on an elevated plain, affording extensive and beautiful prospects. It was incorporated in 1818, and contains a court house, a jail, a female academy, a law school, a printing office, a bank, 84 dwelling houses, and two houses of public worship, one for Congregationalists, and one for Episcopalians, and has some trade. In the township there are nine houses of public worship, 4 for Congregationalists, 4 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Baptists. In the parish of South Farms there is another academy. It is a good agricultural town, and contains numerous mills and manufacturing establishments, among which are four forges of iron, one slitting mill, one nail manufactory, one cotton manufactory, one paper mill, and five large tanneries.—Mount Tom, on the Western border of the township, is 700 feet high.—There are four ponds in this township, the largest of which, called Great pond, comprises 900 acres. There is a medicinal spring, within half a mile of the court house.

The law school in this town is a private institution, established in 1784. The number of students educated from 1784 to 1812, was 474. In 1818, there were 36 students, and two professors. The students in this seminary study the law by titles, in the order in which the lectures are given. The mode of instruction is by lecturing on the several titles of the law in an established order. The course of lectures occupies about 14 or 15 months. One lecture is given every day. There are two vacations of 4 weeks each; one in May, the other in October. The price of tuition is at the rate of $100 a year.

Lithuania, country, Europe, lying between Prussia and Poland, now forming the 3 Russian governments of Wilna, Grodno, and Minsk. It was formerly divided into 2 parts, Lithuania proper, and Samogitia ; and subdivided into 9 palatinates, viz. Wilna, Troki, Polocz, Novogrodek, Witepsk, Brzesc, Msczislav, Minsk, and Livonia. The country is very flat, generally sandy, intersected by vast marshes and bogs, exhibiting every where the aspect of a neglected and half civilized country. It is covered with immense forests, abounding in bears, wolves, wild boars, and other animals. The Lithuanians are indolent, extremely poor, and but little advanced in civilization. Their dress is a coarse shirt, covered with a woollen cloak and drawers, and sometimes merely a sheepskin. Their shoes are made of bark. The country has much good pasture, and produces corn, buckwheat, honey, &c.

Lithuania, (Little), or Prussian, country, Pru., about 100 m. in length, and 50 in breadth. The principal towns are Memel, Tilsit, Gumbinnen, Ragnit, and Insterberg. It is now included chiefly in the government of Gumbinnen, in E. Prussia.

Livadia, pr. Eu. Turkey, bounded N. by Albania and Thessaly, E. by the Archipelago, S. by the gulf of Lepanto, which separates it from the Morea, and the gulf of Engia, and W. by the Mediterranean ; 180 miles in length, from NW to SE., and about 35 miles in its mean breadth. This province comprehends what was properly called Greece, which included Acarnania, Ætolia, Ozolæa, Locris, Phocis, Doris, Epiknemidia, Bœotia, Megara, and Attica. In this country are the celebrated mountains, so much spoken of by the ancients, Parnassus, Helicon, and Cythæron. The places of most note, at present, are Livadia, Athens, Salona, Dadi, and Lepanto. Pop. 249,000.

Livadia, city, Eu. Turkey, capital of a province of the same name ; 28 N. Corinth, 72 W. Larissa, 324 WSW. Constantinople. Lon. 23. 54. E. Lat. 38. 37. N. Pop. 10,000. It is situated east of Mount Helicon, on a steep declivity, divided by a rugged chasm. The streets are narrow and ill-paved, the houses meanly built, and the town has a decayed appearance, but carries on a considerable traffic. The chief attraction in this place to travellers is the cave of Trophonius, and the two streams, (the Lethe and Mnemosyne of the ancients,) which here emerge from their subterranean channels.) When united they form the Hercyna.

Liverpool, t. Eng., in Lancashire, the second seaport in Great Britain, on NE. side of the estuary of the Mersey, near its mouth; 17 N. Chester, 37 W. Manchester, 50 S. Lancaster, 103 N. by W. Birmingham, 206 NW. London. Lon. 2. 59. W. Lat. 53. 25. N. Pop. in 1700, 5,000; in 1760, 26,000; in 1790, 56,000; in 1801, 77,653; in 1811, 94,376, exclusive of 7,000 sailors; in 1820, 118,632; males 54,345; females 64,632. H. 11,784. The Mersey affords excellent anchorage for any number of vessels of any burden, but its entrance is intricate, being much obstructed by sand-banks. The tides rise from 20 to 30 feet at spring, and half as much at neap tides, running past the town with a very strong current. The town extends along the eastern bank of the river about 3 miles, and on an average about a mile inland. On the west side, and forming a remarkable feature of the town, lie the docks, which surpass in commodiousness those of any other port in Britain; and together with the wharfs, ware houses, &c. extend in an immense range along the bank of the river. By a great system of canal navigation, Liverpool has an inland communication with all parts of England; and its prosperity is promoted by the abundance of coal in Lancashire, which draws to its neighbourhood great manufacturing establishments.

The most important branch of the commerce of Liverpool is its trade with Ireland; the second, the trade with the United States; and the third, that of the West Indies. It has, besides, a great trade with other parts of the world. Liverpool possesses three fourths of the whole commerce of the kingdom with the United States; and it is estimated to engross one fourth of the foreign trade of Great Britain, one sixth of its general trade, to furnish one twelfth of its shipping, and in imports and exports to equal half those of London. The number of vessels that arrived here, in 1813, was 5,341; in 1816, 6,888; and in 1819, 7,849, carrying 867,318 tons, and paying duties £110,127.

The streets are generally spacious and airy, some of them elegant, and the greater part lighted with gas. The houses are of brick, covered with slates, and the public buildings are in a style of elegance and splendour. The most remarkable of these are the town-hall, exchange buildings, corn exchange, lyceum, athenæum, Wellington rooms, infirmary, work-house, blue-coat school, dispensary, and asylum, for the blind. There are 46 houses of public worship; 20 for the establishment, 7 for Methodists, 4 for Catholics, 4 for Baptists, 3 for Independents, 2 for English Presbyterians, 2 for Scotch Presbyterians, 1 for Glassites, 1 for Quakers, 1 for Swedenborgians, and a Jews' synagogue. The charitable institutions are numerous, liberally supported, and well conducted. Among the literary establishments, is the Royal Liverpool Institution, opened in 1817, possessing a philosophical apparatus, and a museum of natural history. Public lectures are delivered, and classical and mathematical instruction given. A botanic garden was established in 1801, at the expense of about £10,000, and now ranks with the first in the kingdom. The lyceum contains a news room, and a library of 10,000 volumes; and the athenæum contains also a news room and a library of 8,000 volumes.—Liverpool sends 2 members to parliament. Principal market days, Wednesday and Saturday.

Livonia, gov. Russia, bounded N. by Esthonia, E. by St. Petersburg and Pskov, S. by Polotsk and Courland, and W. by the gulf of Livonia. It consists partly of woods and morasses, and partly of a fertile soil, which yields the inhabitants all the necessaries of life in great plenty. The air is clear and salubrious ; and though the winter is long and severe, and the summer, consequently, but short ; yet the heat of the climate, during the latter season, is such, that the grain sown both in summer and winter, ripens at the proper time. In a plentiful year, when the crops have not failed, the inhabitants export many thousand lasts of rye and barley to Holland, Spain, and other foreign countries ; hence Livonia is called the granary of the north. Vast quantities of flax, hemp, linseed, leather and skins, are exported from hence. The country is thinly inhabited, and the lower ranks live in a state of great degradation, their education and morals being entirely neglected. It is also called The Government of Riga, from the capital. It is divided into 5 circles, Riga, Wenden, Dorpat, Pernau, and Arensburg. Sq. m. 19,896. Pop. 590,000 ; 560,000 Lutherans ; 6,000 Greek church ; 3,000 Catholics.

Loanda, or Loando, isl. in the Atlantic, near the coast of Angola, about 18 miles in length, and a mile wide, divided from the continent by a narrow channel, which forms a good harbour. The soil is unfruitful for grain; but fruits, such as oranges, figs, citrons, &c. abound. It contains 7 or 8 villages. On the coast are found shell-fish, called zimbi, used for money by the natives, like cowries in the Indies. Lat. 8. 50. S.

Loanda, or Loando, or St. Paul de Loanda, s-p. city, Angola, in a province of the same name, capital of the Portuguese possessions in this part of Africa. Lon. 13. 22. E. Lat. 8. 55. S. Pop. stated by Clarke at 5,000; by Hassel at 18,000. It is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a hill, near the sea-coast, and the streets are wide and regular. It covers a large extent of ground, but is neither walled nor fortified. It is the seat of a bishop, and contains 3 convents. The port is safe and spacious; the country around pleasant and fertile, abounding in cattle, corn, and fruits; provisions plentiful and cheap, but the water bad, and must be brought from a neighbouring river, on an island opposite. It has been described as containing 3,000 houses belonging to the Portuguese, all built of stone and mortar; the houses of the natives being much more numerous, but mean; and the Jesuits officiating as priests and presiding over the schools, were said to have 12,000 pupils under them.

Loanghilly, t. Africa, in Loango; the usual burying-place of the emperor; 10 S. Loango.

Loango, country, Western Africa, of limits somewhat vague. The country subject to the king of Loango extends from the Zaire or Congo, on the south, to Cape St. Catherine, a coast of upwards of 400 miles; but Loango proper occupies only the middle part, excluding Mayomba on one side, and Malemba on the other. —The climate is described as fine, rain of rare occurrence, and never violent, but dews abundant; the soil a red stiff clay and very fertile, but little cultivated; the grains are manioc, maize, and a species of pulse, called msangen; the sugar cane grows to a great size; palm-trees are abundant; also potatoes and yams, and the finest fruits grow wild. Among the animals are tyger-cats, ounces, hyænas, hares, and antelopes. The country is thinly inhabited; the population estimated by Degrandpre at 600,000. The inhabitants are very indolent, and live in the most simple manner. Their houses are formed of straw and junk, roofed with palm leaves. The government is despotic, and the dignity is transmitted only in the female line. Almost the only object for which Europeans resort to this coast is the trade in slaves. While Loango was in the height of its power, its port was almost the exclusive theatre of this trade, but now Mayomba, Malemba, and Cabenda are equally visited. The slaves brought to Loango for sale are partly Mayombas, partly Quibangas, and Montekes. The trade has of late much diminished.

Loango, city & capital of Loango, on a river which forms a bay at its mouth, about 6 miles from the Atlantic. Lon. according to captain Tuckey, 12. 30. E. Lat. 4. 40. N. It is about 4 miles in circuit, containing only about 600 inclosures, in each of which there is a number of cottages, and the inhabitants are computed at 15,000. The land in the vicinity is very fertile, and the water excellent. The entrance of the bay is attended with some danger. The town is called also Lovango, Loangiri, Banga, and Buali; by the natives, Borai or Boori.

The territory near it is dry and barren. The harbour is so indifferent, that even the smallest vessels are obliged to anchor at a great distance from the city; and when the tide is at ebb, laden boats cannot approach near it. Notwithstanding this disadvantage, a considerable trade in coffee is carried on from Loheia. The walls are of mud mixed with dung, and the roof is thatched with a sort of grass. The water at Loheia is very bad, and is brought from a distance. Within 6 miles of the city is a small hill, which affords considerable quantities of mineral salt.

Illiers, in Eure-and-Loir, passes by Bonneval, Chateaudun, Cloye, Moree, Freteval, Vendome, Montoire, Chartres, Le Lude, La Plèche, Durtal, &c., and joins the Sarthe, about 5 miles above Le Mans; soon after which they both together join the Mayenne. It is navigable 60 miles; length upwards of 100.

Loir-and-Cher, dep. France, so called from the two rivers, which cross it; the former in the south part, the other in the north. It is bounded N. by Eure-and-Loir, NE. by the Loir-et, E. and SE. by the Cher, S. by the Indre, and W. by Indre-and-Loir, and Sarthe. It is about 66 miles in length, and from 25 to 30 broad. It is divided into three arrondissements, Blois, the capital, Vendome, and Romorantin. Pop. 212,552. Sq. m. 2,564.

Loire, (an. Liger), river, France, which rises about 18 NNW. Aubenas, in Ardèche, passes by, or near to Le Puy, Bas en Basset, Aurec, St. Rambert, Feurs, Roanne, Mercignny, Les Nonains, Digoin, Decise, Nevers, Charité, Cosne, Chatillon sur Loire, Gien, Jargeau, Orleans, Beaugency, St. Die, Blois, Amboise, Tours, Langeais, Saumur, Rochefort, Chalonne, St. Florent, Ancenis, Nantes, &c., and runs into the sea, about 30 W. Nantes, Lon. 2. 10. W. Lat. 47. 12. N. Length 500 miles. The Levee upon the Loire is one of the most stupendous works in France. It extends from Angers to Orleans, and was constructed to confine the river within its banks, and to exclude the waters from a tract of country, which is said formerly to have been a morass 100 miles in length, and 30 or 40 in breadth. Its base is about 40 feet wide; and its elevation nearly 25 from the adjoining level; and its upper surface, which is paved with large stones, is just capacious enough to admit 3 carriages abreast.

Loire, dep. France, bounded N. by Rhine, Saone-and-Loire, and Allier, E. by Rhone, and Isere, S. by Ardèche, and Upper-Loire, and W. by Puy-de-Dome, and Allier. It is divided into Lombardy, p-t. Amelia co. Va.; W. 175.

Lombardy, country, Italy, which corresponds in a great measure with the Cisalpine Gaul of the Romans. It takes the name of Lombardy, from those who founded the kingdom in the middle of the sixth century. It lies between the Alps and Apennines, or between Switzerland and Tuscany. About 250 miles long, and 150 the greatest breadth. It is divided into Upper and Lower, the former consisting of the western part, the latter of the eastern. It is likewise divided into Cispadan and Transpadan Lombardy. The states now formed by Lombardy are Austrian Italy, the continental part of Sardinia, Parma, Modena, and Lucca.

London, (an. Londinium, with the Romans, Lundayn with the Britons, and Londenceaster with the Saxons,) the metropolis of the British empire, situated mostly in Middlesex, chiefly on the N. bank of the Thames, 60 m. from the sea; 396 S. Edinburgh, 330 ESE. Dublin, 190 W. Amsterdam, 225 NNW. Paris, 610 SW. Copenhagen, 660 WNW. Vienna, 860 N. by E. Madrid, 950 NNW. Rome, 1,140 WSW. Petersburg, 1,660 NW. Constantinople. Lon. of St. Paul's church, 0. 5. 37. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 31. N.

In the following table is exhibited, for 4 different periods, the population of the 5 divisions, which compose the metropolis.—The 1st line exhibits the population of London within the walls; the 2d, that of London without the walls, including the Inns of Court; the 3d, that of the city and liberties of Westminster; the 4th, that of the out-parishes, within the bills of mortality; and the 5th, that of the out-parishes, not within the bills of mortality.

The number of males, in 1811, was 457,481, and of females, 552,265; inhabited houses, 141,732; streets, lanes, alleys, and courts, about 8,000; squares, 60. The number of strangers, constantly in the city for business or pleasure, is supposed to be not less than 100,000. The number of deaths, in 1700, was 19,443; in 1750, 27,727; and in 1800, 25,761. London, considered in the aggregate, comprises the city and its liberties, the city and liberties of Westminster, the borough of Southwark, and nearly 30 of the contiguous villages. Its length from E. to W. is 7 and a half miles, and its breadth 5. The thermometer in summer, sometimes rises to 80 deg., rarely to 84 deg., and in winter it sometimes falls to 15 deg., and has been known, though very rarely, to fall to 0.

London, with respect to commerce, manufactures, arts, literature, and charitable institutions, surpasses all other cities on the globe. The number of vessels belonging to the port, in 1701, was 560, carrying 84,832 tons; and in 1800, the number was 2,666, carrying 568,262 tons. The official value of the imports, in 1800, was £18,843,172; exports £25,428,922; real value in all £68,000,000, nearly two thirds of the value of the whole trade of the kingdom. In 1819, it was stated that the amount of exports and imports was about £70,000,000 annually; 4,000 vessels employed in the foreign trade, 9,000 in the coasting trade; the outward and inward tonnage about 1,800,000 tons; 3,000 vessels belonging to the port, carrying 600,000 tons, and 45,000 men.—The manufactures consist chiefly of jewellery, watches, japan-ware, cut-glass, books, cabinet-work, carriages, other fine goods, and articles of elegant use.

The city is built almost wholly of brick, of a pale colour. The houses of the nobility, gentry, and great merchants, are magnificent, spacious, and commodious. A great part of these are situated in the west end of the town. The houses of the city are disposed with great uniformity, and the streets are generally wide. It contains 122 churches of the established religion, 120 chapels of ease, 18 Roman Catholic chapels, 30 churches and chapels belonging to foreign Protestants, 6 synagogues of the Jews, and about 180 meeting-houses of English Protestant dissenters.

But few of the public edifices display great magnificence. The most remarkable exception is the cathedral church of St. Paul, which is esteemed the chief ornament of the city, and is inferior to none in Europe, except St. Peter's at Rome. It was built at the national expense, by sir Christopher Wren, was begun in 1675 and finished in 1710, and cost £747,954, 2s. 3½d. It is 510 feet in length, 282 in breadth, and 340 in height to the top of the cross. Westminster Abbey is a grand Gothic edifice, and is the sanctuary of the illustrious dead, kings, statesmen, warriors, poets, and philosophers. St. James' palace is appropriated to purposes of state; it is inconsiderable in its appearance, and is built of brick. The Queen's Palace, also called Buckingham House, is the town residence of the royal family. It is a handsome brick building. Carlton House, has several magnificent apartments, and the finest armory in the world. The Tower of London, anciently a palace, now contains the mint, the recording office, a royal menagerie, the jewel office, the small armory, which contains stands of arms for 200,000 men. The bank of England is an immense pile of building. The capital of this bank amounts to £11,686,800. Westminster-hall is one of the largest rooms in Europe, unsupported by pillars. It is used for coronation feasts, and occasionally for the trial of peers. The Houses of the Lords and Commons are situated back of Westminster-hall. The Mansion House is the residence of the lord mayor of London. Somerset House is an immense stone edifice, appropriated to various public uses. Guild-hall is the hall in which are held the various courts of the city. The Royal Library contains about 80,000 volumes, collected chiefly by George III. The British Museum is a grand national depository of antiquities, natural and artificial curiosities, printed books, stated at 150,000 volumes, and MSS. said to amount to 60,000. Other public buildings of note are the Royal Exchange, Custom House, General Post Office, Excise Office, East India House, South Sea House, and Commercial Hall. The bridges, which are objects of particular interest, are London bridge, Westminster bridge, Blackfriar's bridge, Waterloo bridge, Southwark bridge, and Vauxhall bridge. They are accounted the most interesting architectural objects in the city, from their magnificence and solidity. In several places there are squares of considerable size, from 100 to 1,000 feet square. The most remarkable are Grosvenor-square, Portman-square, Berkley-square, Cavendish-square, Bedford-square, Leicester-square, and Lincoln's Inn square.

The city contains 5 colleges, viz. Zion College, for the improvement of the clergy, which has a library entitled to a copy of every book published in the kingdom; Gresham College, for divinity, law, physic, astronomy, geometry, music, and rhetoric; the College of Physicians, Warwick-lane, for professors of medicine; Doctors' Commons, or College of Civilians, for the study of the civil law; and the Heralds' College, or College of Arms. There are 16 inns of court and chancery for students of law, the principal of which are the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. The Royal Society, incorporated in 1663, under the presidency of sir Isaac Newton, is composed of the first literary and scientific characters of the age, and has an extensive library. The Royal Academy was instituted in 1768, under the presidency of sir Joshua Reynolds. There are various other literary and scientific associations. There are 41 free schools with perpetual endowments, 300 public, and 3,730 private schools. There are 22 hospitals, 107 almshouses, 18 institutions for the support of the indigent of various descriptions, and 18 prisons. The two principal theatres are those of Drury- lane and Covent-garden. There are 2 others, the Lyceum, and the Haymarket. Vauxhall-gardens are, perhaps, as brilliant and magnificent a place of public amusement as any in Europe. Hyde-park lies on W. side of the city. It was first enclosed by a brick wall, after the restoration. It contains 394 acres, is the grand Sunday resort of pedestrians and equestrians from the metropolis, and is used for the field-days of the horse and foot guards, and other troops.

London contains 15 flesh markets, and 25 markets for corn, vegetables, &c. The number of bullocks consumed annually is 110,000; sheep and lambs 776,000; calves 210,000; hogs 210,000; besides animals of other kinds; ale and porter 1,113,500 barrels of 36 gallons each; spiritous liquors and compounds 11,146,782 gallons; wine 65,000 pipes; butter 16,600,000 pounds; cheese 21,100,000 pounds. As many as 50,000 lamps, were, in 1812, lighted every night, within the bills of mortality. The city is now lighted by gas; and 28 chaldrons of coal are daily consumed for producing the gas; by which 76,000 lights are supplied, each equal to the light of 6 candles.—Four members are returned to parliament for London, two for Westminster, and two for Southwark.

It has been computed that for several years past as many as 800 new books are published annually in the city. In 1815, from the returns made to the house of commons about 20,000 morning newspapers were published daily; 15, or 16,000 evening papers; 20 to 22,000 on alternate days; 70,000 weekly; monthly magazines and reviews upwards of 50; several others published quarterly or at irregular periods.

In this vast hive of human society are to be found the most princely opulence, and the most abject poverty; every virtue which ennobles, and every vice which debases human nature. Colquhoun, in his "Police of London," describes 18 different classes of cheats and swindlers, who infest the metropolis. From a report made in 1815, it appears that there were then, in the city, no less than 15,288 beggars; and it has been computed, that as many as 50,000 females gain a wretched subsistence by vice.

The following are among the calamities recorded in the history of London. In 664 it was ravaged by the plague. In 798, it was almost wholly consumed by fire. In 801, it suffered again by fire. In 1264, 20,000 persons perished by famine. In 1347, it was visited with a terrible pestilence, which lasted several years, and carried off as many as 100,000 inhabitants. No less than 50,000, were interred during one year, in one burying ground. In 1407, the plague carried off 30,000; in 1500, 20,000; and in 1603, 30,578. In 1625, a terrible pestilence carried off 35,417. The whole number of persons who died that year, in the city, was 54,265, said to be one third of the inhabitants. In 1665, the great plague carried off 68,950 persons, according to the bills returned; yet the real number was much greater. The whole number of deaths within the year, as given by the bills, was 97,306. The following year, a fire broke out, which lasted 4 days, and consumed 400 streets, 13,200 dwelling houses, 89 churches, besides a great many other public buildings and splendid edifices. The whole loss was calculated at £10,730,500 sterling. A Monument, 202 feet in height, was erected by sir Christopher Wren, in memory of this fire.—Natives, Chaucer, More, Spencer, Cowley, Milton, Temple, Shaftsbury, Pope, Halley, Doddridge, Churchill, Hogarth, Chesterfield, Glover, Lowth.

Long Island, isl. belonging to the state of N. York, extending E. from the city of New York 140 miles. It is not more than 10 miles in breadth on a medium, and is separated from Connecticut by Long island sound. The island is divided into 3 counties; King's Queen's and Suffolk. Lon. 72. to 74. W. Lat. 40. 50. N. Pop. in 1810, 48,751; in 1820, 57,978. Sag Harbour is the principal port. The south side of the island is flat land, of a light sandy soil, bordered on the sea coast, with large tracts of salt meadow. The soil, however, is well calculated for raising grain, especially Indian corn. The north side of the island is hilly, and of a strong soil, adapted to the culture of grain, hay, and fruits, and the eastern part is remarkably adapted to the growth of wood, and supplies, in great part, the city of New York with this article. The principal towns and villages on the island are Brooklyn, Jamaica, Sag harbour, Flatbush, Flushing, Satauket, and Huntington.

Loochoo, Lieou-Kieou, Lewchew, or Liqueo Islands, a cluster of 36 islands, in the Eastern ocean, south of Japan, 400 or 500 miles E. China. Great Loochoo, the only island of large size, is about 50 miles long, and from 12 to 15 broad. The soil and climate are remarkably fine; the sea breezes preserve it from extremes of heat and cold; while its configuration, rising in the middle to considerable eminences, supplies it with streams of excellent water. Exquisite fruits and vegetables abound, but the most important object of cultivation is rice. The whole coast is surrounded with coral reefs, but it has several excellent harbours; one in particular said to excel that of Port Mahon. The capital is Kintching, situated 5 miles from its port Napakiang. It is beautifully situated on the slope of a hill, the houses intermingled with fine trees, rising gently above each other, and the king's palace crowning the whole. It is in Lon. 127. 52. E. Lat. 26. 14. N.

This island was visited by captains Maxwell and Hall in their return from the late embassy to China, and from the accounts of captain Hall and Mr. Macleod, since published, the inhabitants are a very interesting and estimable people. They are of small stature, the men, on an average, not being more than 5 feet and 2 inches high; but strong, well made, and athletic; their dispositions gay, gentle, and peculiarly amiable, and their manners respectful and polite. During the stay of the English upon their coast, they lavished upon them every species of courtesy and hospitality, and at their departure made demonstrations of deep grief, that were quite affecting. They have long been tributary to the Chinese, but their natural features and disposition are quite distinct; and their appearance indicates their descent from Japan or rather Corea. In complexion they are as fair as the natives of Spain or Portugal. They appeared to be unacquainted with the use of arms, and with money. Their language is a dialect of the Japanese.

Louisiana, country, ceded to the United States by France, in 1803, for 15 millions of dollars. It is bounded north by unsettled country, the limit not adjusted, east by the Mississippi, south by the gulf of Mexico, west by the Sabine to the parallel of 32° north lat.; thence by a line due north to Red river; thence up Red river to the meridian of 100° west lon.; thence along that meridian to the river Arkansas; thence up the Arkansas to its source and to the parallel of 42° north lat.; thence bounded south by the parallel of 42° to the Pacific ocean; west by the Pacific ocean. A tract of country in the southeast, lying east of the Mississippi, and regarded as a part of the Louisiana purchase, is now divided between the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. The region included between the Mississippi and the Rocky mountains, comprises the states of Louisiana and Missouri, and the territories of Arkansas and Missouri. The country west of the Rocky mountains is watered by the Columbia and its branches. But a very small part of this immense territory is yet purchased of the natives. It embraces a great variety of climate, soil, and productions. The face of the country is very various; towards the south it is level, and in many parts overflowed; towards the north, elevated and hilly; and towards the west, abounding in lofty mountains. The principal are the Rocky mountains.

Towns. New Orleans is the capital, and the only large town. Other towns east of the Mississippi, are Baton Rouge, St. Francisville, and Madisonville. The most considerable towns west of the Mississippi, are Natchitoches, St. Martinsville, and Alexandria.

Government, &c. The legislature is composed of a senate of 17 members, and a house of representatives of 34 members. In 1818, 8 of the senators, and 21 of the representatives were French; and the others Americans. A large proportion of the inhabitants are French and Spanish, but the proportion of Anglo-Americans is fast increasing.

Rivers & Lakes. The principal rivers are the Mississippi, Red, Ouachitta, Black, Tensaw, Sabine, Calcasieu, Mermentau, Vermillion, Atchafalaya, Teche, Pearl, Amite, and Iberville. The largest lakes are Pontchartrain, Maurepas, Borgne, Chetimaches, Mermentau, Calcasieu, Sabine, Bistineau, Bodcau, and Ocatahoola.

Face of the country, soil, &c. All the southern part of this state is a vast alluvial tract of low champaign country, extending from lake Borgne to Sabine river, and from the gulf of Mexico to Baton Rouge and Red river, about 250 miles long, and from 70 to 140 wide. This extensive tract is intersected by numerous rivers, bays, creeks, and lakes, dividing the country into a great number of islands. The country about the Balize is one continued swamp, destitute of trees, and covered with a species of coarse reeds, from 4 to 5 feet high. Nothing can be more dreary than a prospect from a ship's mast while passing this immense waste. A large extent of country in this state is annually overflowed by the Mississippi. According to Mr. Darby, the average width of overflowed lands above Red river, from Lat. 31. to 33. N., may be assumed at 20 miles; equal to 2,770 square miles. Below Lat. 31. to the efflux of the La-fourche, about 80 miles in extent, the inundation is about 40 miles in width; equal to 3,200 square miles. All the country below the efflux of the La-fourche is liable to be inundated, equal to 2,370 square miles. From this calculation it appears that 8,340 square miles are liable to be inundated by the overflowing of the Mississippi; and if to this be added 2,550 square miles for the inundated lands on Red river, the whole surface of the state, liable to inundation, will amount to 10,890 square miles. Of this extent, not one half is actually covered annually with water. The immediate banks of all the streams are seldom, and many of them never inundated; and they afford strips of rich tillable land, from a mile to a mile and a half wide.

The country between the Mississippi, Iberville, and Pearl rivers, is an important part of the state. The southern half is a level country, yet highly productive in cotton, sugar, rice, corn, and indigo. The northern part presents an undulating surface, covered with a heavy growth of timber, consisting of white, red, and yellow oak, hickory, black walnut, sassafras, magnolia, and poplar. The district of New Feliciana has been considered, by some, as the garden of Louisiana. The southwestern part of the state, comprising the districts of Opelousas and Attakapas, consists mostly of extensive prairies. Some of these prairies are detached, but the lines of woods between them, are generally very narrow; and they may be considered as forming one immense meadow. A large portion of these tracts are barren, but some parts, particularly that bordering on the Teche, are very fertile, and contain flourishing settlements. It has been estimated, that the prairie lands in the state, including the swamps along the gulf of Mexico, constitute one fifth of its whole surface. The country on both sides of Red river from its mouth to the limits of the state, is intersected with lakes, which are more than 40 in number, and all communicate with the river. The bottoms on the river are from one to ten miles wide, and of a very fertile soil. The timber on the bottoms, is willow, cotton wood, honey locust, pawpaw, and buckeye; on the rich uplands, elm, cucumber, ash, hickory, mulberry, black walnut, with abundance of grape vines; upon the second rate, or sandy uplands, white, pitch, and yellow pines, and various kinds of oak.

Productions. The staple productions of this state are cotton, sugar, and rice. Cotton is much more extensively cultivated than sugar; the former is universal, while the latter is confined to a very limited extent. Very little sugar is raised above Lat. 30. 12. N. It has been calculated that in the state the quantity of land adapted to the cultivation of sugar, rice, and cotton, is as follows; sugar, 250,000 acres; rice, 250,000 acres; cotton, 2,400,000. The annual profits resulting from the labour of 50 hands employed in cultivating these three articles in Louisiana, has been calculated as follows; in cultivating sugar, 12,000 dollars; rice, 4,200; cotton, 9,000.—The exports of this state, in 1816, amounted to $5,602,948.

Climate. In the southern part of the state, the climate in summer is hot, sultry, and unhealthy; in the northern part it is more temperate and healthy. About Lat. 30. is a region of snow. Few if any instances occur of its falling below that parallel; but it has been known to fall a foot deep at Opelousas, in Lat. 30. 32. N.

Lat. 38. 3. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,357; in 1820, 4,012. It is a flourishing town, next to Lexington, the most considerable in the state. It is pleasantly situated, being built on an eminence which is 70 feet high, gently descending to a narrow plain along the bank of the river. It contains 2 banks, one of which is a branch of the U. S. bank, 2 printing offices, an academy, various other public buildings, and several rope walks, and manufactories.

The three principal streets run parallel with the river. From the front street, there is a fine prospect of the rapids and of the shore, and hills on the opposite side of the river. A company has been incorporated by the legislature of Kentucky, for the purpose of opening a canal on the Kentucky side of the rapids. An extensive commerce is now carried on from this town, with Natchez, New Orleans, and St. Louis.

Louisville, p-t. & cap. Jefferson co. Georgia, on the Ogeechee, 70 miles from its mouth; 50 E. Milledgeville, 110 NW. Savannah, W. 644. Pop. in 1810, 524. It contains a court house, a jail, and a meeting house. This town was formerly the seat of the state government.

Louvain, or Loeven, or Lowen, t. Neth., in S.

Brabant, on the Dyle and the canal of Louvain ; 13 NE. Brussels, 21 SW. Antwerp. Lon. 4. 42. E. Lat. 50. 53. N. Pop. 25,400. H. 4,000. The city was first surrounded with walls in 1165, and afterwards very much enlarged in the 14th century, and is 9 miles in circuit, but the greater part of the space inclosed, is occupied by gardens, vineyards, and cornfields. The streets are tolerably regular, but the houses are ill built. It contains 1 collegiate and 5 parish churches, a number of convents, and 8 hospitals. The town hall and collegiate church are magnificent, and the great hospital is capable of containing 2,500 persons; the other public buildings, except those of the university, are of little note. Its principal manufacture is beer; and it still has some manufactures of woollens and lace, and trades also in corn and hops. Vessels of 150 tons come up to the town. It was formerly larger and much more flourishing than at present, and had very extensive manufactures of linen and woollens. In the beginning of the 14th century, it had 4,000 houses inhabited by clothiers, who employed 150,000 workmen.

John IV. duke of Brabant, in 1426, founded a university here, which has since been the chief ornament and glory of the place, and is said to resemble those in England more than any other abroad. There are 48 colleges in this university, which, though they are much admired for their situation and building, are not, however, so sumptuous as those of Oxford and Cambridge. This university was suppressed in 1797, by the French, but has again been revived. The Dutch have a college for Roman Catholics, the English one of Dominican friars, the Irish one of secular priests, another of Dominican friars, and another of Franciscans.

Lubeck, p-t. & s-p. Washington co. Maine; 3 S. Eastport, 30 E. Machias, W. 805. Pop. 1,430. It is finely situated on Passamaquoddy bay, and has a spacious and excellent harbour, safe from all winds, and never closed by ice. It was set off from Eastport, in 1811, and then contained only about 380 inhabitants. The principal village, pleasantly situated on Flag's point, was commenced in 1815, and contains a Congregational meeting house, a custom house, 30 stores, and about 50 dwelling houses. The wharfs are high and well built. The township is remarkably indented by bays and inlets, and includes several islands, among which are Frederick and Dudley islands. The soil is productive, and the shores abound in marine manure. On Quoddy Head, the eastern point of the township, and on the western entrance of the bay, is a lighthouse. A little to the east, lies the English island of Campo Bello.

Lubeck, free city, Ger., adjacent to Holstein, on the Trave, 8 miles above its entrance into the Baltic; 33 N. Lauenburg, 38 NE. Hamburg, 148 S. Copenhagen. Lon. 10. 50. E. Lat. 53. 51. N. Pop. 25,526. H. 3,300. It is situated on a long, elevated site, the west side being contiguous to the Trave, and the east side traversed by the Wackenitz. It is surrounded by walls, which are planted with rows of trees, and carefully preserved as walks for the inhabitants. There are several broad and straight streets, and the interior is more regular than in most old towns. The houses are of stone, most of them old-fashioned.

It was formerly a bishop's see, and still contains a cathedral; also 4 parish churches, a Reformed church, a Catholic church, a poor house, an almshouse, an orphan house, a council house, and a gymnasium. The council house, called Hansesaal, is a Gothic building, containing a hall, which was, in former ages, the place of meeting for the deputies from the Hanse towns, among which Lubeck had the precedence. This town is now connected in some commercial proceedings with Hamburg, Bremen, and Frankfort. They still retain the name of Hanse towns, and have a court of appeal at Lubeck.—Vessels drawing more than 10 feet discharge their cargoes at Travernunde, at the mouth of the Trave. The principal export is corn. But its commerce latterly is not great, Hamburg possessing superior advantages.—Natives, Mosheim and Kneller.

The territory of Lubeck lies along the Trave, extending to its mouth, containing a population, including the city, of 45,527, and 116 sq. m. The prevailing religion is Lutheran.

Lucca, duchy, Italy, bounded N. by Modena, SW. by the Mediterranean, elsewhere by Tuscany. Pop. 137,525. Sq. m. 413. It is divided into 3 districts, Serchio, Littorale, and Appennines. Two thirds of the country are supposed to be covered by mountains and defiles; the remainder consists of a delightful plain around the city, and a number of fertile valleys in other parts. The principal river is the Serchio. The climate is mild; and the soil consists of a black alluvial mould, like that of the plains of Lombardy. By the industry of the inhabitants every spot is rendered more or less productive. The hills are covered with vines, olives, chesnuts, and mulberry trees, while the coasts and low grounds are laid out in meadows of luxuriant pastures. Some corn and great quantities of fruit are likewise raised in the elevated districts; but silk and olive oil form the most important products and exports.—Lucca was a republic from the middle of the 15th century to 1805. By the congress of Vienna it was given to be possessed, as an indemnity, by the infant of Spain, Maria Louisa.

Lucca, city, Italy, capital of the above duchy; 19 NNE. Leghorn, 30 W. Florence. Lon. 10. 34. E. Lat. 43. 54. N. Pop. 17,610. Abp. see.

It is situated on the Serchio, in a fertile plain, surrounded by beautifully cultivated hills. It is about 3 miles in circuit, and its ramparts, planted with rows of trees, give it from a distance the appearance of a forest. It contains a palace, a cathedral, 22 churches, 20 convents, a university, a large school, an academy of arts and sciences, and a celebrated academy for the education of young ladies. The streets, though generally crooked, are for the most part tolerably wide, and are well paved with broad flat stones; the houses are generally well built. The palace is more remarkable for its size than elegance of architecture. Several of the chh. are built of Carrara marble. The houses of the higher ranks in the town are not remarkable, but in the neighbourhood most of them possess magnificent residences. The celebrated baths of Lucca stand in the bottom of the valley, on the Serchio, a little distance from the town. The trade is considerable in olive oil and silk; the manufactures are cloth and silk.—Native, Diodati.

Lucerne, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Aargau, NE. by Zug, E. by Schweitz, S. by Unterwalden, and W. by Berne. Sq. m. 663. Pop. 86,700. The religion is Catholic, and this is the most powerful and zealous of the Catholic cantons. It is divided into 5 districts, Lucerne, Entlibuch, Willisau, Sursee, and Hochdorf. It is one of the least mountainous portions of Switzerland, the north consisting only of large plains, intercepted only by small elevations; the south more mountainous. The climate and soil are more favourable than the surrounding cantons. The productions are cattle, horses, goats, sheep, and hogs; corn in abundance, flax, hemp, and vines.

Lucerne, city, Switz., capital of the canton of the same name; 38 E. Berne, 60 SW. Constance. Lon. 8. 6. E. Lat. 46. 56. N. Pop. 5,000. H. 600. Bp. see. It contains 4 churches of Gothic architecture, 2 convents, 2 hospitals, an academy, and a Catholic college with 12 professors. It has a picturesque situation on the lake of Lucerne, where the Reuss issues from it, which river divides it into two parts, communicating with each other by bridges. The streets are clean, and tolerably well built.

Lucerne, or Waldstatter See, or Lake of the Four Cantons, lake, Switz., between the cantons of Unterwalden, Lucerne, Schweitz, and Uri; 25 miles long, but of zigzag form, and very unequal breadth; but generally 2, 3, and 4 miles; 1,380 feet above the sea; in some places 600 feet deep. It is the largest and most romantic lake in the interior of Switzerland, and the natural scenery is very wild and striking. The Reuss passes through it.

Lucknow, circar, Hind., in Oude, bounded N. by Kairabad, E. by Oude circar, S. by Manickpour, and W. by Canoge; about 75 m. long, and 45 broad. The soil is sandy, though, when well watered, is very productive, and yields cotton, grain, and fruits.

Lucknow, city, Bengal, capital of a circar of the same name, in Oude, situated on the Goomty; 95 NNW. Allahabad, 215 SE. Delhi. Lon. 80. 55. E. Lat. 26. 24. N. Pop. in 1800, estimated at upwards of 300,000; since that time it is thought to have diminished. It was formerly estimated as high as 500,000. It is a very ancient city, and the residence of the governors or nabobs of Oude. It is by no means a handsome town, the streets being very irregular and narrow; some of the houses of brick, but most of them mud walls, covered with tiles. The situation is bad, and the soil is a white sand, which in hot weather, is driven about by the wind, and pervades every thing. The gilt domes of the mosques and the mausoleum of Azophud Dowleh, give it a gay appearance at a distance. In the vicinity of the city stand the houses of the British resident and other European inhabitants.—The Goomty is navigable for middling sized vessels at all seasons.

Lucko, or Luck, or Lutzk, city, Russian Poland, in Volhynia, capital of a circle, on the Styr; 176 SSE. Warsaw, 200 ENE. Cracow. Lon. 25. 19. E. Lat. 50. 40. N. Pop. 2,462. It has a castle, and is also the residence of a bishop. In the year 1429, a remarkable conference was held here, at which the emperor Sigismund, 2 kings, and several princes were present.

Luçon, or Luconia, the principal of the Philippine islands, in the Eastern seas, belonging to Spain, sometimes called Manilla, from its capital. Between Lat. 13. & 19. N. Lon. 120. to 124. E.—About 400 miles from N. to S., and from 90 to 120 in breadth. Sq. m. about 65,000. Pop. estimated at 900,000, or 1,000,000.

The country is generally mountainous, an elevated ridge extending the whole length; and there are several volcanoes. The climate is moist, but temperate for the latitude; and the soil fertile. Cotton, indigo, sugar, tobacco, coffee, and other tropical produce grow in great abundance, also the richest fruits of the East and West Indies. There are 40 different sorts of palm trees, excellent cocoas, and cassia; wild cinnamon, wild nutmegs, ebony, sandalwood, and excellent timber for ship-building. Gold is found upon the mountains, and is washed down by rains. Cattle abound; wild-cats are common; and ambergris is thrown upon the coasts in great quantities. The natives, who are of a mild character, are called Tagals, and appear from their colour, shape, manners, and language, to be of Malay origin. They are tall, and well made; their complexion deep tawny; their chief food rice and fish; their clothing a kind of shirt, with loose drawers; their houses made of bamboo, covered with palm leaves.—The government of the Spaniards is an impolitic and ruinous tyranny.

It is surrounded with moats and walls, fortified with towers, and contains 4 churches, 4 hospitals, a gymnasium, and a military school. It has a large trade in horses, 70,000 being brought here annually. It formerly held a leading rank among the Hanse towns; and is still next to Emden the most busy place in the km. of Hanover. The town is not handsome; the streets are dark and narrow, and the houses old fashioned. It has a salt spring, from which salt is manufactured and exported in considerable quantities; and west of the town is a hill from which 20,000 tons of lime are procured annually.

Luneburg, pr. Hanover, bounded N. by the duchy of Lauenburg and the Elbe, E. by the duchies of Brunswick and Mecklenburg, S. by Calenberg and Brunswick, and W. by Bremen, Verden, Hoya, and Calenberg. Pop. 245,976. H. 31,710. Sq. m. 4,231. The soil here is various; along the Elbe, the Aller, the Jetze, and some other small rivers, are fruitful marsh lands; but other parts of it, to the amount of upwards of 3,000 acres, are sandy; others again consist of immense heaths, others of turf moors, and some are swampy. The tract covered with heaths is called, on account of its barrenness, the Arabia of Germany.

Bautzen is the capital of the Saxon province of Lusatia, or Upper Lusatia. The principal towns in the Prussian part are Gorlitz and Lauban in Upper Lusatia; Cöthbus, Guben, Lubben, and Luckau in Lower Lusatia.—Upper Lusatia forms the southern part, and consists, in a great degree, of a sandy plain; but a mountain ridge, called Wohlische Kamm, runs along the southern frontier, and is connected with the larger ridges of Riesengebirge and Erzgebirg. The rivers which water the country rise from these mountains, and flow into the Oder and Elbe; the principal ones are the Black Elster, Schwarzwasser, Spree, Neisse, Pulsnitz, and Queis. The soil is not fertile, supplying hardly half of what is consumed by the inhabitants. Flax is extensively cultivated. Cattle, horses, and sheep are raised in great numbers. There are considerable forests, and some iron mines, but the chief wealth of the country arises from its numerous manufactures, consisting of woollens, linens, cotton, iron, leather, stockings, hats, gloves, wax, and tobacco.—Lower Lusatia, lying on the north, is less fertile than Upper. A great part of it is covered with moving sands, and on the rivers are several marshes. The rivers are the Oder, Spree, and Neisse. Agriculture is backward. The chief manufactures are woollens and linens.

Luxemburg, pr. Neth., bounded N. by Liege, E. by the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine, S. and SW. by France, and NW. by Namur. Sq. m. 2,291. Pop. 225,945. It is divided into three districts.

Districts.	Pop.	Capitals.
Luxemburg . . .	87,167 . . .	Luxemburg.
Dietkirch . . .	47,074 . . .	Dietkirch.
Neufchateau . . .	91,945 . . .	Neufchateau.

The inhabitants are mostly Catholics ; composed of Germans, French, and Walloons. The rivers are the Moselle, Semoys, Sure, Elese, and Our. The face of the country is very mountainous, being traversed by branches of the Ardennes ; the climate colder than the surrounding countries, the soil much less productive ; the quantity of corn raised not nearly equal to the consumption ; potatoes in great quantities ; flax and some wine : the raising of cattle is an important business, but the great supplies for its traffic are drawn from its forests, which occupy no less than 466,000 acres. Iron is the only important mineral.—The manufactures are not extensive.—Luxemburg was erected, in 1815, by the congress of Vienna, into a grand duchy, and ceded as a compensation for his territory in Germany, to the king of the Netherlands, who in addition to his other titles, takes that of the grand duke of Luxemburg.

Luxemburg, (an. Augusta Romanorum & Lucis Burgum,) city, Neth., capital of the above province, on the small river Alsetz ; 16 SW. Treves, 50 SSE. Liege, 130 SE. Brussels. Lon. 6. 9. E. Lat. 49. 37. N. Pop. 9,432. H. 1,500. From the natural abruptness of its situation, and the works by which it is defended, it is one of the strongest places in Europe. It is one of the grand fortresses belonging to the Germanic confederation. It is divided into Upper and Lower Town. The Upper or Old Town is built in the form of a heptagon, and stands chiefly on a steep rock, out of which the fortifications are excavated. The Lower Town is situated in a deep valley. The principal public building is the governor's castle ; there are 4 churches and a hospital ; and manufactures of cloth, stockings, and earthenware ; also iron works. In the town and environs are many remains of Roman antiquities.

Luxorein, or Luxor, or Aksorein, v. Egypt, on the right side of the Nile ; 18 S. Kous. It is situated on a part of the ancient Thebes, where are the ruins of a large and magnificent temple supposed to be a part of the sepulchre of Osymanduas. The ruins of Thebes, according to Mr. Brown, extend for 9 miles along the Nile, from Luxor to Carnac, on the east side ; E. and W. they reach to the mountains, a breadth of 8 miles. The river is here 300 yards broad; the circumference of the ancient city must therefore have been above 27 miles. Mr. Brown supposes that the words Luxor and Aksorein are a corruption of El Kussur.—See Thebes.

Lynchburg, p-t. Campbell co. Va., on south bank of James river; 12 N. Campbell C. H., 12 ENE. New London, 34 SSE. Lexington, 100 W. Richmond, 160 SW. Washington. These distances are expressed in right lines. The distance from Richmond by the road is 120 miles, W. 206. Lon. 79. 22. W. Lat. 37. 30. N. Pop. in 1818, estimated at 5,500. It is situated 20 miles below the great falls, where James river breaks through the Blue Ridge. It is one of the most flourishing and commercial towns in the state, and contains a court house, a jail, 2 clerks' offices fire proof, a market house, 2 banks, a masonic hall, a Lancasterian school, a female academy, several other literary seminaries, a circulating library, 2 printing offices, which issue, one a weekly, and the other a semi-weekly newspaper, and 3 houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Baptists. There is also in the vicinity a Friends meeting house. A large proportion of the houses are of brick, of 2, 3, and 4 stories. Here is a toll bridge across the river, and also a free bridge. The town contains seven public ware houses, in which from 10, to 12,000 hhds. of tobacco are annually inspected, 4 tobacco manufactories, 5 tobacco stemmaries, 32 stores for dry goods, 31 for groceries, 17 taverns, 8 commission houses, and numerous other establishments for trade and manufactures. There are in the vicinity 3 manufacturing flour mills on an extensive scale, and not far distant there are 3 cotton and woollen manufactories. In the neighbourhood of the town there are four mineral springs.

Lynchburg was established in 1786, and incorporated in 1805. It is built mostly on the declivity of a hill. The surrounding country is rugged, broken, and mountainous, but abounds in fertile valleys, and is populous. This town, from its situation, commands an extensive trade, not only with the western part of Virginia, but extending to the states of North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio. The articles of produce brought to this market consist of tobacco, wheat, flour, hemp, butter, peach and apple brandy, whiskey, cider, iron, lead, beef, live hogs, &c. The produce is conveyed in batteaux down the river to Richmond, which is the depot of all the merchandize passing from Lynchburg, destined to foreign markets.

The village is situated at the confluence of Mud creek and the outlet of Canandaigua lake, which unite to form the Clyde, and on the border of the Erie canal. The ground on which the village is built slopes to the south-east, and at the lower side of the village, on the margin of the canal, large basins and warehouses are erected. It is a thriving village, with a considerable and increasing trade, and contains a printing office. On the streams above their junction are good mill seats, and several mills are erected.

Lyonnais, before the revolution, a province of France, about 30 miles in length, and 17 in breadth, now forming a part of the departments of the Rhone and the Loire. The chief city was Lyons.

Lyons, or more properly Lyon, (an. Lugdunum,) city, France, capital of Rhône, at the conflux of the Rhône and Saône; 190 N. by W. Marseilles, 280 SSE. Paris, 300 ENE. Bourdeaux. Lon. 4. 49. E. Lat. 45. 46. N. Pop. in 1820, about 115,000; before the revolution about 140,000; reduced during the revolution to 80,000. Abp. see. Lyons has long ranked as the second city of France, and in manufactures the first. The Rhone and Saone coming from the northward, approach within less than a mile of each other, flow for several miles nearly parallel, and afterwards unite; on this tongue of land, thus formed by the two rivers, Lyons is chiefly built. It is $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, and, including some streets on the west side of the Saone, about a mile wide. All this is compact building; but if the scattered streets further to the west, on the heights of Fourviere, be included, the breadth will be 2 miles. All this space is surrounded by ramparts, and the entrances to the city are by 6 gates. There are 7 bridges over the Saone, and 2 over the Rhone.

The situation of the city is delightful, but it has little pretensions to elegance of architecture. The streets cross each other at right angles, but they are in general extremely narrow, and many of them dark and gloomy, except in the new parts of the town, such as the square of Louis le Grand, and the quays along the Rhone, where the edifices display considerable elegance. The houses are mostly of hewn stone, generally of 5 or 6 stories, partaking of all the gloominess of the street, and built in a heavy style of architecture, remarkable only for its solidity. There are 4 public squares; one of them styled La Place de Belcour, is among the finest in Europe. It is planted with rows of trees, and surrounded with elegant buildings, belonging to the gentry and opulent merchants. There are some fine promenades. Some of the most noted public buildings are the Hotel de Ville, and the large hospital called Hotel Dieu; the hospital De la Charite, capable of containing 3,000 patients; the cathedral of Saracenic architecture, remarkable for a curious clock, the motions of which are extremely complicated; the Episcopal palace, 2 theatres, the arsenal, the exchange, and the mint. There are 47 Catholic churches, and 1 Reformed. It contains an academy with 3 faculties, an academy of sciences, an academy of fine arts, societies of medicine, agriculture, and commerce, a public library of 120,000 volumes, a botanic garden, and cabinets of antiquities, medals, and natural history.

Lyons is particularly noted for its extensive fabrics of silks. In 1789, about 12,000 bales of raw silk were consumed in France, of which 3-4ths were used at Lyons. The number of looms at Lyons for silk, velvet, gauze, crape, and thread, at the commencement of the revolution, was 9,335; persons employed 58,600; in 1803, only 1,553 looms were employed. Since the restoration, Lyons has, in a great degree, resumed its former activity. The chief articles of manufacture are gold and silver brocade, plain, double, and striped velvet, embroidered taffeta and satin, gold and silver laces or galloons, gauze, ribbons, and silk stockings; also hats, leather, carpets, and coloured paper. In printing and bookselling, Lyons ranks next to Paris. It was formerly computed that of the manufactures of Lyons, one half went to Paris, one fourth to the provinces, the remainder to foreign countries; except in the case of rich stuffs, three fourths of which were sold to foreigners; at present the greater part goes to Paris. The merchants have very extensive connexions, and trade with Spain, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, &c. There are 4 annual fairs, in January, May, August, and November. The neighbourhood of Lyons is one of the most pleasant spots in France, being not only more fertile, but more populous than the vicinity of Paris. Viewed from an eminence, it presents to the eye a succession of villages, chateaux, and country houses, delightfully situated in the midst of lawns, pleasure grounds, and gardens, variegated by hills and dales, woods and vineyards, meadows and cornfields.—Natives, Symphorien Champier, Menestrier, Berserade, Gacon, Jussieu, Terrason, Stella, Vivien, Coysevaux, Coustou, and Audran.
